IT'S ONLY A FINGERTIP AWAY... WITH THE NEW O.E.M. COMMODORE DECIMAL/STERLING ADDING MACHINE

FLICK...IT'S DECIMAL. FLICK...IT'S STERLING

The unique O.E.M. Commodore sweeps away all fears regarding decimalisation. This is that rare example: A truly decimal and sterling machine in a capacity range of 9/10 Decimal: 10/11 Sterling. So, in 1971, you have no decimal conversion costs—and you can still calculate old records in sterling! A simple touch of the finger converts the operation to sterling or decimal as you wish. Another BIG advantage is how small the O.E.M. Commodore is—slim enough to slide into a shallow drawer. Available in electric or manual form, it is light and compact enough to be carried in a brief case. Post off the coupon below for further information.

Capital issues with adjusted stock market prices

The second edition of Extel's successful new service is now available. This covers the fiscal years 1965/66 and 1966/67, and will be supported during 1967/68 by three cumulative supplements in July, October and January—also introducing adjustment factors for application to base values on any date since 6th. April 1965.

The service may now be regarded as an authority on the valuation of quoted securities for Capital Gains Tax purposes. It has been ordered by the Inland Revenue for use in every local Tax Inspector's office throughout the United Kingdom.

Subscription for the 1967/68 fiscal year: £10.

Dividends

In response to increasing demand from professional advisers, Extel is introducing at the beginning of the fiscal year a new annual record of dividend payments.

Contained in a separate bound volume, every Company quoted on any U.K. Stock Exchange will be listed in alphabetical order, together with details of the dividend payments on both Preference and Ordinary Share Capital. Companies passing their dividends will also be shown in their appropriate place in the alphabetical list.

The record will contain:—

Details of stock—details of dividend expressed as a percentage rate and an amount per share—dates for declaration, entitlement, payment and ex-dividend. Scrip and rights issues will also be indicated as a further useful guide.

The first volume of the dividend record will cover dividends paid during the 1966/67 fiscal year.

Both services will be offered on approval for 14 days, further details available from:—

Impossible to doubt the desirability of protection of this kind. Unfortunately, the very nature of most pension schemes leaves them largely at the mercy of long-term inflationary trends.

The solution can be a privately administered pension plan with wider latitude in its investment provisions. This is the basis on which we work at Chase Manhattan. In conjunction with an independent consulting actuary, we would aim to provide for you a plan which is weighted in favour of growth investment. Protection against inflation is, as a result, built in.

Why not have a chat with us, let us show you how, in conjunction with an independent consulting actuary, a plan can be prepared to meet your organization's precise requirements. You'll discover just what an advantage it is to have a friend at Chase Manhattan.

Quoted Close Companies

CORPORATION tax presses with extra severity on the large majority of companies which fall within the definition of 'close company'. The new Finance Bill (which had its second reading on Tuesday) widens still further the scope of that definition. Under the Finance Act 1965 a company is close if, broadly speaking, it is controlled by five or fewer participators, or by director-participators, however numerous.

The definition is by no means confined to family companies which keep out of the limelight. Many well-known public companies whose shares are regularly dealt in on the Stock Exchange are already close companies. However, if shares of a company which carry as much as 35 per cent of the voting power are beneficially held by the 'public' then, in general, the company escapes classification as a close company. The shares must not be entitled to a fixed dividend. They must have been both quoted and dealt in on the Stock Exchange in the previous twelve months, but naturally not all of them need to have been the subject of actual dealings. This exemption from close company status is conferred by paragraph 1 (3) of Schedule 18 to the Finance Act 1965.

The sub-paragraph goes on to say that for this purpose shares 'shall not be deemed to be allotted to, or acquired or held, by the public if they are allotted to, or acquired or held by –

- (a) any director or associate of a director of the company;
- (b) any company which is under the control of any such director or associate or of two or more persons each of whom is such a director or associate; or
- (c) any associated company of the company'.

Presumably what the draftsman meant was that such shares were to be deemed not to be held by the public.

The Finance Bill extends the restrictions on the shares which can be said to be held by the public within the meaning of paragraph 1 (3). The extension is made by paragraph 5 of Schedule 11 to the new Bill which (among several other things) introduces the concept of a 'principal member'. The paragraph sets out to define closely what 'public' means. It says in sub-paragraph (2) that shares shall be deemed to be beneficially held by the public if, and only if, sub-paragraph (3) of paragraph 5 so provides.

However, exclusions (a), (b) and (c) made by the original paragraph 1 (3), and set out above, still hold good, while another exclusion is made by paragraph 5 (4). This further exclusion is aimed against shares held by pension funds, but apparently not against funds which have been approved under section 379 or section 388 of the Income Tax Act 1952. Paragraph 5 (4) reads:

'(4) Shares shall not be deemed to be held by the public if held as part of any fund the capital or income of which is applicable or applied wholly or mainly for the benefit of, or of the dependents of, the employees or directors or past employees or directors of the company, or of any company within paragraph (b) or (c) of the said paragraph 1 (3).'

A pension fund holding shares in the company for whose staff the fund was set up is a common phenomenon nowadays. The trustees of such a fund can be expected to co-operate with the current directors. This is subject, of course, to their obligations as trustees, but where the fund is itself mainly for directors, the trustees must act for their benefit. However, the fund may be purely for ex-employees, or dependents of ex-employees, and have nothing to do with directors or dependents of directors, past or present. Nevertheless, it is caught by paragraph 5 (4).

We now go on to paragraph 5 (3) which is as follows:

'(3) Shares shall be deemed to be beneficially held by the public -

- (a) if beneficially held by a company resident in the United Kingdom which is not a close company, or by a company not so resident which would not be a close company if it were so resident; or
- (b) if held on trust for a fund or scheme approved under section 379 or section 388 of the Income Tax Act 1952 . . . ; or
- (c) if they are not comprised in a principal member's holding'.

The specific inclusion of approved superannuation funds seems to be in direct conflict with the exclusion of pension funds by paragraph 5 (4) and on a strict reading it would seem that all pension funds - approved or not - are excluded. However, there is no doubt that in practice approved funds and schemes will rank as the public for the purpose of the 35 per cent test. Such approved funds, as well as shares held by non-close companies, will be treated as held by the public even if the holders are 'principal members', but other principal members' holdings will not count towards the necessary 35 per cent.

What is a 'principal member'? To begin with, a person cannot be a principal member at all if he does not 'possess' more than 5 per cent of the 'voting power' in the company. If he does possess that much voting power and there are not more than four other persons in that position (whether principal members or not), he is a principal member. If more than five persons in all each possess that much voting power, then he is not a principal member unless he is, as it were, one of the top five. Thus if the following members possess the percentages shown (being the highest individual amounts in the company) then it is the first five who are principal members:

Member	Percentage of voting power
A .. .. .	10
B .. .. .	9
C .. .. .	8
D .. .. .	7
F .. .. .	6

Where there is a tie between members, the number of principal members may be increased. Assume the following:

Member	Percentage of voting power
A .. .. .	9
B .. .. .	8
C .. .. .	8
E .. .. .	6
G .. .. .	6

Here one cannot point to any particular five members as possessing the highest voting power, so E, F and G are all principal members, as well as A, B, C and D.

How does one determine how much voting power a person 'possesses'? The phrase 'voting power' is not itself defined. In relation to estate duty, one counts not only voting power in the ordinary sense but also voting power which is exercisable only in special circumstances. But this is by special provision. Presumably the voting power which only arises when, say, a preference dividend is in arrear or there is a motion to wind up, is not counted. Paragraph 5 (8) requires the inclusion of voting power which would be attributed to the person by paragraph 3 (3) (4) of Schedule 18 to the Finance Act 1965. Thus he 'possesses' the voting power of his nominees and other persons under his direction. He also possesses the voting power of all the following:

- (i) a company he controls; and
- (ii) a company he and his 'associates' jointly control;
- (iii) an 'associate' of his.

It will be recalled that paragraph 5 (3) (c) of Schedule 11 to the new Bill speaks of a principal member's 'holding', not his voting power. However, such a holding is defined as consisting of the shares which carry the voting power possessed by him paragraph 5 (9)).

The 35 per cent public beneficial ownership test cannot be satisfied at any time when the total percentage of the voting power in the company possessed by all the principal members exceeds 85 per cent. At first sight this further veto would seem superfluous, since ex hypothesi it leaves only 15 per cent held by the public, which is well under the 35 per cent minimum. However, paragraph 5 (5) of Schedule 11 extends the meaning of 'held' in paragraph 1 (3) of Schedule 18.

How Vital are Statistics?

BECAUSE the study of statistics has had no part in the syllabus for their qualifying examinations – and perhaps for other reasons as well – chartered accountants have tended either to dismiss the whole subject of statistics as just another word for the same kind of figures with which they are commonly and daily concerned, or to avoid the subject as being something abstruse, academic and not really quite reliable enough for business purposes. However, the latest publication in the English Institute's Management Information series entitled Management information and statistical method, by Mr L. W. SHAW, B.Sc., F.C.A., is clearly designed to expose accountants to statistical method and compel them to consider it as a necessary tool of trade.

There is no doubt that a divide exists in the modern business world between those who have had some training in statistical method and those who have had none. The first group are quite at home with the customary jargon of the statistician and can talk about and use sampling, trend interpretation, correlation analysis, probability theory and the rest. That convenient 'shorthand' which the trained statistician uses for formulating his problems and which appears to be incomprehensible and rather alarming to the untrained, emphasizes the divide. And, unfortunately, a knowledge of statistics appears too difficult to acquire in later life if there is no early experience upon which to build.

It is into this unsatisfactory environment that Mr SHAW has injected his book. It looks as though he felt that he needed to convince the majority of his readers that his subject was relevant to them, for the book starts with a somewhat discursive chapter on the basic requirements of a management information system, without so much as mentioning statistical method. It appears to be the soft sell or 'more-by-honey' approach.

The book approaches statistics very gently and then only via a slightly laboured chapter on the presentation of information to management, especially through the use of graphs and charts. Then the reader suddenly realizes that he is hooked. What appeared to be either a rather too long introduction, or an uninspiring discussion of a side issue, has been skilfully used by Mr SHAW to demonstrate that every accountant makes use of some part of statistical method in his work, but that many do not realize it and do not have the real knowledge of statistics which is required to do more than play with Z charts and averages.

This series of booklets which the General Educational Trust of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has undertaken is clearly intended to make a large number of chartered accountants realize that they have a great deal to learn. As each booklet has come out the diligent accountant – diligent at least in that he is assumed to read the booklets as they emerge – realizes that another hole has been punched in the comfortable feeling that his basic professional training, helped out by continuing practical experience is enough to earn him a place in society worthy of respect. It is a fact that the sixties of this century have made a lot of people – including accountants – feel like colanders with more holes than marketable knowledge. Of course, it is quite wrong to take this view because, as wise men from the time of SOCRATES have realized, the first essential step towards knowledge is to recognize the lack of it.

'Statistical processes provide a quantitative and objective method of analysing management problems, but their real function is to locate rather than solve problems'. Thus Mr SHAW both says what statistical method has to offer, and stamps on any suggestion that it is anything more than one more tool to be used in the search for profits. Some accountants may think it a good idea to glance at the last chapter in the book on 'Sampling' even before they arrive at it in a natural progression, for therein is the skeleton of a technique which can make it possible for the accountant to test large quantities of data and arrive at judgements upon them based upon a required level of confidence.

Obviously the Institute, acting through the General Educational Trust, thinks that it cannot afford simply to wait for time to produce a cadre of accountants with a basic knowledge of statistical method. This seems to be a proper attitude to adopt, and the only question is whether it is any longer good enough to adopt the soft sell approach. We already have the situation in which much of the discussion of management science presupposes a knowledge of statistical method; and unless accountants acquire this knowledge quickly they may find themselves increasingly unable to contribute. There could be a case for the sponsoring of something in the nature of a 'crash' programme to teach statistical method to as many as have ears to hear. There should be no difficulty in finding instructors and it could be a splendid subject for the intensive use of modern teaching methods, and programmed learning in particular. The only argument might be as to whether basic numeracy had first to be tackled through the medium of 'new math', which would itself imply a basic knowledge of statistics.

The Art of Valuation

WHERE taxation is concerned this is an age of valuations. Taxes have spread their net widely in the recent past but not nearly as much as the scope of valuations. Valuation has been with us almost as long as taxes, though its impact on the tax bill at first was not nearly so great.

The forerunner of estate duty was probate duty, which began in 1694 as a humble stamp duty of a fixed 5s imposed when the estate exceeded the then respectable figure of £20. Even two hundred years later when the more drastic estate duty was imposed in 1894, the maximum possible rate was only 8 per cent of the value of the estate; thus variations in valuation did not alter the tax bill very materially. Nowadays, with the maximum rate at 80 per cent, if by some mischance an asset really worth £100 is valued at £125, the estate duty becomes total confiscation. Moreover, while one can die only once, estate duty is now supplemented by capital gains tax at 30 per cent; and as capital assets pass from hand to hand by gift, they have to be valued for the purpose of computing the 'gain'. Even on a disposal at arm's length for cash it is usually necessary to value the asset as at April 6th, 1965.

Then again, local government is financed largely by rates which are levied on the 'rateable values' of the property in the area. Before the last war each authority had its own rating valuers and the method of approach differed greatly in different areas. However, low values generally meant correspondingly higher poundages so that the valuation did not matter so very much; nevertheless it was untidy. Valuation was then centralized in the Valuation Branch of the Inland Revenue which is staffed by professional valuers. That is for land, and the Inland Revenue also have a branch which concentrates on valuing shares in unquoted companies. Broadly speaking, all valuations for tax purposes go through those two branches.

The Valuation Branch also carries out valuations in the case of compulsory purchase; in this case not for tax purposes but for the purpose of arriving at 'fair compensation' for what the property owner is required to part with. If, however, the valuation is too low, the owner loses not 80 per cent or 30 per cent on the error, he loses 100 per cent. It is therefore even more important in such cases that the valuation be fair.

But valuation is not an exact science. DANCKWERTS, J., in an estate duty case where there was a question of valuation of shares, observed that here one had to 'enter into a dim world peopled by the indeterminate spirits of fictitious or unborn sales'. An imposing array of expert valuers was marshalled by each side and came to remarkably diverse conclusions. In the end the learned judge, after describing their efforts as guess-work, simply split the difference between the lowest on one side and the highest on the other, and the taxpayer paid tax on 19s a share in place of the valuation of £3 put forward by the Inland Revenue.

But not everyone can afford to take the Inland Revenue to the High Court and most people have to depend on the fairness of the valuations officially put forward. It is therefore highly important that the Valuation Branch should be completely impartial in these matters.

The vast programme of road widening and road building which the country has undertaken necessitates a great many compulsory purchases of land requiring an assessment of fair compensation – which, as indicated above, is a matter for the Valuation Branch. A recent example is the improvement of the A2 trunk road to motorway standard. This means that 780 owners are forced to relinquish land, while thirty-two homes, two shops, two cafés and three other buildings are being demolished. A good deal of the land consists of strips of the gardens of adjoining houses. In one case, it is reported, a man lost 23 square yards of his garden and was offered £1 for it – rather less than a penny-farthing a square foot or £211 per acre. He naturally resisted this offer and the Revenue valuer finally agreed £125. In another case the valuer offered the same amount of £1 for 33 square yards, or £147 per acre.

One has to bear in mind that if an official professional valuation is to be resisted, it has to be met by another professional valuation. The published scale of fees for a professional valuation of land shows a minimum of seven and a half guineas. It is therefore only when the owner has some degree of certainty that a £1 'impartial' offer is less than one-ninth of the real value that it is worth while seeking professional assistance. Even when that certainty is realized, at the end of the day the owner may find himself paying the whole of the hard-won compensation to his own valuer. This is not a happy state of affairs for him to reflect on as he contemplates the noisy traffic speeding by under his front window where the garden used to be.

The drawbacks to employing one's own professional valuer are even greater where the question is one of valuation for, say, capital gains tax levied at 30 per cent (or even less) on the gain, as distinct from the value of the property itself. Assume, for example, that a taxpayer had land which he acquired many years before April 6th, 1965, and that he gives it away on April 6th, 1967. He thinks there has been no increase in value; on the other hand the district valuer says that it was worth £5,000 in 1965 and £5,200 in 1967, showing a gain of £200 on which the tax is £60. If the donor wishes to resist this he must have two professional valuations made. Suppose now that these produce a figure of £5,000 at both dates, the cost of those two valuations will be some £63 at least, which is more than the tax.

When one adds to this the uncertainties as to the true value, even after the professional valuers have finished their work, there is a great deal to be said for drastically cutting down the scope of those taxes which depend on valuations.

The Accountant Annual Awards

WINNING COMPANIES FOR 1967

The two companies which have been selected to receive The Accountant Annual Awards for 1967, the fourteenth year of the Awards, are:

GUEST, KEEN & NETTLEFOLDS LTD

The reports and accounts of these companies were judged the best of nearly one thousand two hundred and fifty entries for this year's Awards.

Each year's Awards are for reports and accounts presented at company annual meetings held during the previous calendar year. The Award to Guest, Keen & Nettlefolds, therefore (which is that for large companies), is in respect of their accounts for the year to January 1st, 1966, presented at the company's annual general meeting on April 29th, 1966.

Alenco receive the Award for 'smaller' companies requiring less complex accounts than those of a large group, in respect of their accounts for the year to September 30th, 1965, presented at the company's annual general meeting on February 24th, 1966.

The Rt Hon. The Earl of Cromer, P.C., M.B.E., will present the Awards at Merchant Taylors' Hall on May 25th in the presence of a distinguished company representing the City, the professions, commerce and industry.

The Awards, which are of equal rank, each take the form of a pair of handmade silver wall sconces inscribed with the name of the winning company and specially designed with ancient and modern symbolism depicting commerce and accountancy. They are made annually to companies whose shares are quoted on a recognized stock exchange in the United Kingdom, in relation to the form and content of their published reports and accounts; particular importance is attached to the adequacy of the information given and its presentation.

Panel of Judges

The members of the Panel of Judges are:

Mr Roy Borneman, Q.C., Chairman.

Mr Robert Adams, C.A., a member of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland and senior partner in a London firm of chartered accountants.

The Hon. J. F. H. Baring, a managing director of Baring Brothers & Co Ltd.

Mr W. G. Campbell, B.A., F.C.A., a former member of the Restrictive Practices Court and of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

Mr A. S. H. Dicker, M.B.E., F.C.A., a Past President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

Mr J. A. Hunter, M.B.E., T.D., a member of the Council of The Stock Exchange, London, and senior partner in a firm of stockbrokers.

Mr J. A. Jackson, F.C.A., a member of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and senior partner in a London firm of chartered accountants.

Mr Ian T. Morrow, C.A., F.C.W.A., a Past President and a member of the Council of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants; also a prominent industrialist.

Mr C. Hilary Scott, President of The Law Society, a partner in a London firm of solicitors and a former member of the Jenkins Committee on Company Law.

Mr Arthur E. Webb, Editor of The Accountant.

Current Affairs

Bristol Siddeley Inquiry

MR C. J. M. BENNETT, B.A., F.C.A., a member of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and a partner in the firm of Barton, Mayhew & Co, Chartered Accountants, of London, has been appointed a member of a three-man committee set up jointly by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Minister of Technology to examine the circumstances of the Bristol Siddeley case.

The committee, which will be under the chairmanship of Sir Roy Wilson, Q.C., President of the Industrial Court, is to investigate the circumstances of the pricing of certain contracts for the overhaul of aero-engines in the period 1959 to 1963, leading to a repayment in March 1967 by Bristol Siddeley Engines Ltd to the Ministry of Technology.

The committee's terms of reference have been so drafted as to require them not only to investigate all the circumstances of the case itself, but if they see fit, to propose either that they themselves should go on to examine wider aspects of Government contracting or that some other body should do so. It is hoped that the committee will be able to produce a first report by the end of July.

Inheritance Taxes

TWO years ago Professor C. T. Sandford, of the new University of Bath, produced a Hobart Paper entitled Taxing Inheritance and Capital Gains. In this he advocated the abandonment of the existing estate duty and its replacement by taxes on inheritance and all other capital receipts. The grounds for this proposal were the widespread avoidance of estate duty which tends, in practice, to fall only upon those who are either unlucky or unprepared, and to achieve a more effective redistribution of the national wealth. In a second edition of this paper (Institute of Economic Affairs, price 7s 6d), he discusses some of the criticisms levelled at the original proposal and touches upon some recent efforts by the Chancellor to devise new taxes. Of the selective employment tax, he is especially critical, on the grounds that 'coming so soon after the controversial capital gains tax and corporation tax this is also subject to substantial amendment in Parliament', and could lead to disillusionment with tax reform. The main lesson, he rightly observes, is 'the need for thorough preparatory work before major changes are introduced'.

Developing the Money Market

FROM the same stable, Hobart Paper 39 entitled Financial Intermediaries and Monetary Policy (price 7s 6d) reviews the role of the financial institutions in the money market and, in particular, criticizes some of the Radcliffe Committee's views on monetary policy.

The author, Dr Gibson, of Manchester University, has provided an excellent review of recent development of financial intermediaries. His view that the Radcliffe Committee 'may have been over-impressed by the possibilities of substitution and may have over-generalized on the basis of the post-war adjustment period' with regard to the control of liquidity will not necessarily be shared by all readers. However, he is critical also of selective controls and comments that the Government seems to believe that because markets are imperfect 'this justifies any form of interference with their functioning'. In consequence, he wonders 'if this approach does not help to exacerbate rather than resolve persistent economic problems'.

Tax Amendments in Ireland . . .

THE 1965 Finance Act in Ireland introduced new rules for taxing profits arising from dealing in or developing land. While the Act was primarily aimed at speculators, its effect was to penalize almost any citizen who had taken steps to improve his property, unless he was able to claim exemption under any of four categories specified. Owing to the broad, and often obscure, nature of the provisions of Part 7 of the Act, however, its application has proved highly difficult and controversial. Accountants in particular have found it full of pitfalls.

In his Budget Speech on April 11th (referred to in The Accountant of April 22nd), the Minister for Finance confirmed that he would amend the law in this area, but not before the autumn.

Broadly speaking, the only people who may sleep undisturbed in the meantime, after carrying out reconstruction, extensions or alterations, are those who had occupied their property exclusively as their main or only residence from the date of the alterations to the date of sale. In addition they must not have had any liable property dealings in the three years prior to the date of sale. Taxpayers who had dealings in flats or rented property, which had been subjected to reconstruction, have been well advised to consult their accountants at all stages of the proceedings.

The terms of the Minister's proposals for amendment, and their retrospective element, if any, are awaited with keen interest.

... And Surtax Relief

THE relief given in the 1967 Irish Budget of an allowance of the first £1,250 of accrued income, in addition to the basic allowance of £2,500, has been welcomed warmly by Irish surtax payers. There are less than five thousand surtax payers in the country, and the tax they paid under this heading amounted to £2,660,000, an average of about £568 each. The breakdown of the taxpayers into actual income brackets reveals the small numbers involved:

Income brackets	Number of surtax payers
£3,000-£4,000	1,648
£4,000-£5,000	1,176
£5,000-£6,000	653
£6,000-£7,000	354
£7,000-£8,000	258
£8,000-£9,000	161
£9,000-£10,000	103
Over £10,000	331
	<hr/> 4,684 <hr/>

In addition to the reliefs, the Irish surtax payer is entitled to deduct admitted income tax allowances, viz. single, married, widowed, child, housekeeper, and dependent relative. After appropriate deductions the new rates are: on the first £2,000 assessable, 3s; on the next £2,000 assessable, 6s, and over these figures, 9s.

The incidence of the tax has been to some extent shifted from the earned-income group to the unearned-income group. Thus a married man with no children, having an earned income of £6,000 per annum, will pay £2,066 this year compared with £2,314 last year -

President's Dinner. On Monday of last week, Mr W. Sholto Olleson, T.D., F.A.C.C.A., then President of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, gave a dinner in Carpenters' Hall, London. The distinguished company was representative of the Government and the public service, the professions, the City and industry.

Echoes of Sharkey v. Wernher

THE Inland Revenue have not given up their attempt to tax an author on the value of a copy-right which he has given away.

On Friday of last week, the Court of Appeal began the hearing of the Revenue's appeal against the High Court decision in Hammond v. Innes, reported in The Accountant of December 17th. The whole difficulty has been brought about by the somewhat curious decision of the House of Lords in Sharkey v. Wernher (34 A.T.C. 263), to the effect that where a trader takes an item of trading stock out of stock without selling it, he is deemed to have sold it at its then market value and must pay tax on it accordingly.

The question naturally arises as to how far this underlying principle can be taken. If a professional man gives his services free, for instance, should he pay tax on the value of those services?

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

LAST week the deputy-chairman summoned me to his office. He sat there glowering in silence for a few moments, then unburdened himself carefully. His son needed a widening industrial perspective; a change from his present post as company transport co-ordinator was desirable. I acquiesced courteously. The carefree son, returning from a convivial lunch, had tried to park a company car at 50 m.p.h. and wrecked the garage rear wall and our biggest delivery van. Yes, change was desirable.

I'd like him to have a rotational assignment in accounts, said the D.C., his jutting jaw indicating a pointed reluctance to listen to reason, and I felt a premonition of dire days ahead. However, I made co-operative noises of modified enthusiasm. Possibly a situation in the departmental trading section where he could see the turnover and gross profits figures being progressed and establish friendly liaison with our sales force, would be helpful?

His father shook his head impatiently, which recalled to my mind that his hulking off-spring had recently side-swiped Scotty's new car at the kerb in passing. Reaction at sales manager level would be something less than enthusiastic. Perhaps a post in our financial section, I suggested, with dividends, investments and cash flows as his targets; expertise here would come in useful in later life.

This well-meant comment induced a noticeable purpling of my superior's complexion. I hoped silently that I hadn't inadvertently reminded him of his son's recent misadventures with a bounced cheque, and an irate bank manager notably unsympathetic to the rising generation's little peccadilloes. What about an initial run in costs? I suggested. Ample scope there for hard work and positive responsibility; it would be of undoubted value for a possible top executive of the future to become sophisticated in revenue ratios.

'Don't know that I want to pin him down to being a clerk', said the D.C. brusquely. 'I don't see him as a typical accountant – all forms and fuss, with nothing to do but pick holes in other people's work. You might take him on as personal assistant, perhaps, and let him range freely'.

At this stage we ceased to be ad idem, though I veiled my legitimate annoyance with an effort at these curmudgeonly aspersions. In a modern accounts department, I stressed, a closely-knit team fulfil a mixed bag of recording/reporting/analysing/implementing and discussing functions. Each member knew his place and did his job. There were no sinecures and no places for . . . supernumeraries (a word I only just managed to insert in place of 'drones'), no matter how talented.

This eloquent tailpiece went as unnoticed as its logical prelude. 'He'd better have a room to himself since he'll be dealing with top level confidential matters, rather than become bogged down in too much detail elsewhere', reflected the D.C., obviously disinterested in anything but having his own way. 'Besides, he can help out if the costing section get into trouble, by chasing up their contacts for explanations. You could describe him as an activities analyst, say, or an expeditor'.

It's remarkable how often executives of otherwise normal acumen within their limits, assume that accountants require outsiders to help them when in trouble. In our company, by contrast, it's the accountant who forays forth – like a knight of the round table – to extricate the oafish outsiders from the results of their misfeasances. Anyhow, the son's energies are normally devoted to expediting fast cars and their faster occupants, so his sallies from his private room might have unforeseeable results.

At this stage, however, the proud father became grumpily impatient, so we compromised by doing things his way. A new post, grandiloquently entitled, Special Studies Co-Ordinator, was established there and then, and our hope in Accounts Department is that our already redundant newest member may find other avenues for his talents before he does too much harm.

Investment Grants and their Treatment in Accounts

by IDRIS HICKS, B.Com., F.C.A., and P. S. MANLEY, B.A., A.C.A.

INVESTMENT grants – the revised system of ‘fiscal incentives’ for investment – introduced by the Industrial Development Act 1966 are beginning to appear in company accounts, and one Sunday paper recently commented that ‘The varying treatment of cash grants is proving a nightmare for investors in comparing company profit performances’ (Sunday Telegraph, April 2nd).

The purpose of this article is to consider the proper presentation of these grants in accounts having regard to their nature and the objectives they seek to achieve. The proposals of the English Institute and of the Research Committee of the Scottish Institute are compared, and their respective merits in the context of the system of investment grants considered. A sample taken from the annual reports of the major United Kingdom companies is reviewed to see how these grants have in fact been handled in published accounts.

Tax incentives for investment

Fiscal measures designed to provide an incentive to industry to intensify both the quality and direction of investment are now an accepted feature of the planning of an economy. The variations of the old wear and tear allowances since 1945 demonstrate this and may be summarized thus:

‘... successive governments have made use of initial allowances and investment allowances. . . . Initial allowances (first introduced in 1945) are accelerated annual allowances and equivalent to an interest free loan. Investment allowances (first introduced in 1954) give tax relief over and above the full cost of the asset and are thus equivalent to a cash grant to those firms who pay enough tax to benefit from them. . . .’ (Cmnd 2874, paragraph 9).

The new cash grant system ought to be looked at from the point of view of the improvement, if any, it represents over the existing capital (including investment) allowances system. The investment allowance was superior to the initial allowance because it gave tax relief on a figure over and above the full cost of the asset but the weakness of the latter system lies in the fact that investment allowances were ‘equivalent to a cash grant to those firms who pay enough tax to benefit from them . . .’.

The words in italics coupled with the fact that the system of investment allowances was applied in a stop-go manner destroyed much of the incentive effect of this allowance. Furthermore, initial allowances and investment allowances were not as selective as they might have been in that they gave no added incentive to those trades and businesses that it was important to encourage in order to improve all-round efficiency and the balance of payments situation. A government committed to expansion and the modernization of industry, increasing efficiency and correcting the weakness of the external balance of payments was bound, therefore, to seek among other things for more effective means of improving the amount, quality and direction of investment. The modernization of the system of taxation of companies was to be regarded in this light. The Chancellor stated that the objectives of the new system of taxation of companies was:

‘to modernize the tax system, to rid it of anomalies and provide an incentive to dynamic companies to develop at a rapid pace through the use of their ploughed-back profits’.

As a further inducement to invest, the system of capital (including investment) allowances was replaced by the system of investment grants. It is worthy of comment that the evidence of the Richardson Committee that all business men they consulted ‘were broadly agreed that factors other than taxation largely determined investment decisions’ added to the pressures to move away from the system of initial (including investment) allowances.

Several alternatives were explored and the one most favoured by the Confederation of British Industry – that of free depreciation – was unacceptable to the Government. The ultimate choice fell on the cash grant as being ‘the most direct method of achieving’ the desired objectives.

The nature of investment grants

The old system of initial and annual allowances, as we have seen, gave relief in the form of a reduction of the tax to be paid; that is, if there were taxable profits the amount of such profits would be reduced by the amount of the capital allowances given so that tax payable would be reduced but the benefit would be lost if there were no or insufficient taxable profits. The cash grants, however, are a direct contribution towards capital expenditure approved by the Board of Trade as qualifying for the grant.

In effect, approved capital expenditure will be financed fully to the extent of the cash grant and with regard to the balance of the expenditure to the extent of the rate of corporation tax or the standard rate of income tax, as appropriate, at the rates ruling during the period of ownership of the assets on which the expenditure was incurred.

The problem that faces the Board of Trade is to define approved capital expenditure from two points of view. First, to define which types of assets fall into the category of approved expenditure for purposes of the grant, and, secondly, to define the amount of expenditure on those assets which should rank for the grant. Broadly speaking, the Inland Revenue tends to follow what is considered to be best commercial practice but unfortunately there is often no standard commercial practice which can be classified as the 'best'. The question of what ranks as capital expenditure and what ranks as revenue expenditure is very often confused and a variety of treatments appear in different companies' accounts. It is perhaps more difficult then to define approved capital expenditure in the second sense. In fact the problem was touched upon by the Board of Trade in its booklet, Investment Grants: A Guide for Industry, in the following terms:

'The intention is to make grants on the true capital cost of providing new assets which qualify for grant. . . . The way in which expenditure is treated in an applicant's books will normally be relevant. It is, however, within the Board of Trade's discretion to decide whether expenditure can properly be regarded as capital expenditure for investment grant purposes.'

The capital/revenue analysis is one that causes considerable confusion. Business practices in connection with expenditure of a quasi-capital nature are varied. Accordingly, the use of discretion by the Board of Trade in deciding whether expenditure represents capital investment or not is of crucial importance, for given expenditure may be treated in the books for accounting purposes in a manner which would not on the face of it appear to represent capital expenditure with the result that the cash grant could be lost. If, therefore, the Board of Trade is satisfied that the expenditure represents capital investment, the manner in which it is treated in the books becomes irrelevant.

Obviously there will be real cause for disagreement and room for manoeuvre on this problem of how much should qualify for grant purposes.

Treatment of grants in accounts

With this brief background to the system of cash grants this article now turns to the problem of presentation of these grants on the face of the accounts. The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, in its recently published Recommendation 24 on the matter, states:

'8. Investment grants should be treated as a form of deferred credit which should be reflected in the profit and loss account over the estimated useful lives, as computed for depreciation purposes, of the assets to which the grants relate. Either of the following treatments is appropriate:

- (a) Grants should be applied in reduction of the purchase price of the assets to which they relate, with a consequential reduction in the amounts charged to revenue by way of depreciation of the assets or writing off the relevant expenditure. If the amount of the grants is material, the description of the amount at which the assets are shown in the balance sheet should make it clear that the grants have been deducted; or
- (b) Assets should be shown in the balance sheet at cost before deduction of the grant and the grants shown in the liabilities section, separate from capital and reserves, as a deferred credit pending transfer to profit and loss account at a rate consistent with that at which the relevant depreciation charge is computed.'

It is worthy of note that this recommendation was reached in two stages. An interim statement published in May 1966 suggested that the grant should be deducted from the asset in the balance sheet and that depreciation should be calculated on the net cost of the asset to the firm. The interim statement has now been modified by the addition of (b) above which moves away from the deduction of the grant from the asset to treating it as a 'deferred credit pending transfer to profit and loss' over the life of the asset.

It is important to realize that fundamentally the English Institute regards the investment grant as a revenue receipt in each of the cases cited above. This approach is to be compared with that of the Research and Publications Committee of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland whose views (subject to two minority opinions) were reported in The Accountant of September 17th, 1966. The committee takes the view that the best treatment would be to:

'Transfer the grant to capital reserve (less a proportion transferred to taxation equalization account and brought back to profit and loss account over the life of an asset as an offset against the extra tax suffered by reason of the reduced written-down allowances).'

The committee argues that this method shows the grant properly as an addition to the capital employed; the asset values will be stated on a consistent basis and the depreciation charge will not be distorted by the grants and will represent a comparable charge for every asset. The minority views are, however, important and propose that:

- (a) 'since the grants were capital receipts no part thereof should be used to increase profit and therefore no transfers to and from taxation equalization account should be made; and
- (b) 'the whole grant should be deducted from the cost of the asset concerned as in Method 3 above, with the proviso that the amount of the grant should be shown separately.'

Method 3 mentioned in the minority view (b) indicates that depreciation would be calculated on the net cost of the asset (that is, cost less cash grants). This being so, the only difference between the Scottish Committee's proposal (taking account of minority view (b)) and the English Institute's Recommendation 24, paragraph 8 (a), lies in the fact that the Scottish Committee proposes not to allow the cash grant to be considered available for distribution by crediting it back to profit and loss account, except to the extent of the extra tax suffered by reason of the reduced written-down allowances, while the English Institute takes full credit for the grant in the profit and loss account over time. The Scottish Committee's proposal as modified by minority view (a) goes further and argues that no part of the cash grant should be taken back to the credit of profit and loss account.

The Scottish Committee method as compared with the English Institute methods can be illustrated thus:

BALANCE SHEET
	Scottish Committee	English Institute
	£	(a) £	(b) £

What is the incentive?

The question, therefore, resolves itself into a discussion of the nature of the incentive. In general terms it may be argued that the purpose is to induce a firm to invest when it would not otherwise do so (especially in the development areas), on the grounds that the return would be inadequate to attract capital from outside sources such as shareholders and loan investors, or to justify the investment of retained earnings.

The contribution from the Board of Trade may be looked upon as 'non-reward-seeking' which could make the difference between investing and not investing, that is, by making the return earned on the full investment adequate to reward the contribution of the 'reward-seeking' investors (shareholders and loan investors), represented by the balance of the capital cost of the investment.<sup>1</sup> (The question then arises as to the level at which the cash grant is fixed — it may be that it is at too low a level to outweigh other considerations such as the location at which the firm would prefer to make the investment on, say, marketing grounds. The cash grant differential might have to be even higher to induce investment in development areas as compared with a similar investment in other areas.)

If the investment is undertaken, the profits of the company would be increased by the net return expected from the new investment or the increased return expected from this investment as compared with the return enjoyed from the existing investment and will, therefore, augment the fund from which shareholders can be rewarded. It seems, then, unnecessary to make available to the shareholder the amount of the cash grant as well — a result that appears to be possible should the English Institute proposal be implemented. Moreover, the practice would offend against one of the avowed intentions of the revised scheme of taxation of companies — the encouragement of the retention of earnings.

Treatment currently adopted in annual reports

On these grounds it would appear that the Scottish Committee's proposal, as modified by minority view (a), is the more acceptable, ensuring as it does that the capital contribution from the Government is retained as part of the capital employed by the business.

Investment grants have been in operation now for just over a year and have begun to appear in company reports. The writers looked at a number of reports for accounting periods ending in 1966, and 62 companies out of the 100 largest in the United Kingdom were chosen, all with accounting years ending after January 31st, 1966, as it was thought that the remainder would not, in any case, need to deal with investment grants in their accounts. The results were as follows:

	Number of companies
No mention of grants .. .. .	20
Grants not taken into account .. ..	8
Grants dealt with in accounts:
Investment grants deducted from assets	26

Investment grant credited to capital reserve .. .. .	1

In fact, about one-third of the reports contained no mention of the grants. It is true, however, that a large proportion of the companies concerned were engaged in activities such as retailing and transport, which would not attract investment grants. A further eight companies, although indicating that they were eligible for grants and in some cases giving the estimated amount involved, included statements that they had not taken credit for these grants in their accounts. Two companies put the blame for this upon the administration of the grant system:

The Chairman of Plessey Ltd stated:

'In view of the difficulty of deciding with any degree of precision the company's entitlement to investment grants (approximately £400,000), it has been decided to ignore any credit arising up to June 30th, 1966, except for computing our tax liabilities.'

The Chairman of Stewarts and Lloyds Ltd said:

'In view of the lack of definition still obscuring the Government's administration of investment grants, no credit has been taken in the accounts for future claims. It is estimated that approximately £400,000 should eventually be received in respect of expenditure presently thought to qualify for these grants.'

When we arrive at the companies which have taken investment grants into account we find that the large majority has dealt with them by deducting grants receivable from the relevant assets, treating the amounts receivable as a current asset. A fairly typical example is Dorman Long Ltd:

'The amount receivable in respect of investment grants under the Industrial Development Act 1966 is estimated to be £1,220,469. In the balance sheet these grants have been deducted from the relevant assets and depreciation has been calculated on the net amount. £1,220,469 is included in debtors as at September 30th, 1966, in respect of these grants.'

This, of course, is the original treatment suggested by the English Institute in the interim statement on investment grants, now embodied in Recommendation 24, paragraph 8 (a).

Only eight companies out of our sample of sixty-two have credited the grants to reserve. Of the eight, six stated their intention of releasing this reserve to profit and loss account over the life of the relevant assets and one of the eight has given no indication of its intentions. United Steel, for example, said:

'Credit has been taken for investment grants receivable and the total amount due has been carried to an investment grant reserve as an addition to capital employed. These grants will be released to the credit of profit and loss account over the life of the assets. Depreciation will continue to be calculated on the gross amount of the assets in respect of which the grants are made.'

This treatment is that mentioned in Recommendation 24, paragraph 8 (b), but as indicated above, it is contrary to the proposal of the Scottish Committee and indeed offends against the argument that external investors who have already enjoyed a satisfactory return on their share of a particular investment are also being given a windfall addition in the form of the apportionment of the grant to the revenue of successive years. This method has, of course, the merit that depreciation is calculated on a consistent basis. One company, at least, has, to the knowledge of the writers, used this method in order to maintain consistency in charging depreciation, the effects of investment grants being shown 'below the line'.

Only one company, Leyland Motors Ltd, followed the treatment recommended by the Scottish Committee:

'We estimate that grants amounting to £1,158,993 will become payable to the Group in respect of qualifying expenditure during the year on plant, machinery and equipment. We have capitalized fixed assets at the cost before deducting investment grants, and the depreciation and amortization has been provided on the gross figures. 60 per cent of the grants have been taken to capital reserve and 40 per cent to the revenue reserve taxation equalization account. Income has been credited from the latter account with £108,267 which would have been allowed in terms of tax, had the grant portion of capital expenditure ranked for tax allowances.'

Conclusion

The English Institute's recommendation and the proposals of the Research and Publications Committee of the Scottish Institute show an important difference of principle. The latter proposals (as modified by the minority opinion (a)) insists that the grant is an addition to the capital employed and should not, therefore, be regarded as available for distribution. The English Institute on the other hand regard the grant as 'a form of deferred credit which should be reflected in the profit and loss account over the estimated useful lives, as computed for depreciation purposes, of the assets to which the grants relate' and this in addition to the earnings derived from the use of those assets.

It is our opinion that the Scottish Committee's proposals (perhaps the minority opinion (a) is too conservative) are the more correct view of the nature of investment grants—that they are injections of new capital into the business and should be treated in essence as non-distributable items. The fact that the grant is deductible from the outlay cost before the calculation of capital allowances probably justifies the transfer to taxation equalization account which is ultimately transferred to the credit of revenue, but the attitude of those responsible for minority opinion (a) is understandable.

Our survey suggests, however, that the English Institute's opinion in its original (interim) form is being followed but whether this is because business men are taking the easiest way out or because they are convinced of the correctness of the principles embodied therein remains to be seen. Perhaps the issue may be resolved by the direct interference of the Government against the treatment of the grants as 'deferred credits'.

Betterment Levy—VIII

by K. BUCKLEY EDWARDS

CASE E (section 34) of the Land Commission Act applies to any disposition for valuable consideration which is not comprised in, or made in consideration of, a disposition under Case A or Case B, and is a disposition which:

- (a) grants an easement; or
- (b) releases or modifies an easement or a 'restrictive right' (which is defined by section 85 (1) as meaning a covenant or agreement restrictive of the use or development of land, not being a covenant or agreement made between a lessor and a lessee).

Section 34 only applies, however, if the disposition is notified to the Land Commission under section 41 by the person in whose favour the easement is granted, released or modified. Notification is entirely permissive, as it is in the case of a lease for less than seven years under Case A or Case B; but since a disposition under Case E may be taken into account as an expenditure on the acquisition of an ancillary right only if it is notified to the Commission, there is every inducement for the person who is paying for the disposition to notify the Commission. The person liable to pay levy in the event of notification being given is the person who makes the disposition and receives the consideration for it.

Under section 34 (5) (d) the 'grantor' means the person who grants the easement or releases or modifies the easement or restrictive right, and the 'grantee' means the person in whose favour it is granted, released or modified. If the grantee desires to give notice to the Commission he must, under section 41 (3), do so within thirty days after the date of the disposition or such extended period as the Commission may allow; and the notice must contain the following particulars prescribed by regulation 8 of and Part II of Schedule 3 to the Betterment Levy (Notification) Regulations 1967:

- (1) the names and addresses of the grantor and grantee;
- (2) the relevant land, the relevant interest and the situation of the relevant land;
- (3) the interest of the grantor in the relevant land at the date of the disposition, the effect of the disposition (so far as known to the grantee) and the consideration given for it;
- (4) in the case of a disposition granting an easement, the situation of the land in which at the date of the disposition the grantee had an interest and which was land to which immediately after the disposition the benefit of the easement was annexed or was land held with land to which that benefit was then annexed;
- (5) in the case of any other disposition, the situation of the land (if any) in which at the date of the disposition the grantee had an interest that was land which immediately before that date was subject to the easement or restrictive right in question.

Relevant land

In Case E the area of land involved in the disposition is important, particularly where the land may be depreciated in value as a consequence of the disposition. The 'relevant land' is defined by section 34 (5) as meaning:

- (a) on the grant of an easement, the land over which the easement is granted together with any associated land which is incidentally affected by the disposition;
- (b) on the release or modification of an easement, all the land in which the grantor had an interest immediately before the disposition to which the benefit of the assessment was attached, together with any associated land incidentally affected by the disposition; and

- (c) in relation to the release or modification of a restrictive right, all the land in which the grantor had an interest to which the benefit of the restrictive right was attached immediately before the disposition.

In the application of section 34 to a disposition granting, releasing or modifying an assessment:

- (i) land is to be taken to be 'associated' with the land over which the easement is granted or to which the benefit of the easement is annexed ('the land principally affected') if it is land which immediately before the disposition is held by the grantor with the land principally affected, and he is entitled in the same capacity to his interest in that land and to his interest in the land principally affected; and
- (ii) so much of any 'associated land' as is land in which the value of the grantor's interest is depreciated by the disposition is to be taken to be land incidentally affected by the disposition.

Method of assessment

Levy in Case E is chargeable on the amount of the consideration for the disposition, reduced by the 'appropriate deduction' as in Case D. The amount of the consideration is calculated in accordance with Part IV of Schedule 4 and will be the amount paid under the terms of the contract or disposition, as reduced by any valuation costs incurred. The base value may be either eleven-tenths of the current use value of the grantor's interest (Schedule 4, paragraphs 37 and 38) or the normal Schedule 5 base value derived from the consideration for a previous disposition, adjusted where purchased after April 6th, 1967, for any increase or decrease in current use value in accordance with paragraph 14 (2) of Schedule 5.

To whichever base value is the higher, an allowance for any related tenancy and any expenditure on improvements or ancillary rights must be added, and from this aggregate must be deducted the restricted value of the interest after the disposition. The difference will be the 'appropriate deduction', and the consideration, less the appropriate deduction, will be the amount on which levy will be payable. A credit may arise under Case E where the appropriate deduction exceeds the amount of the consideration. This credit may be carried forward as under Case D.

Examples

1. A owns a house and has a right of way over the adjacent land of B. A releases his right of way (an easement) over B's land in consideration of the payment by B to A of the sum of £2,000. The current use value of A's house before the release of the right of way is £6,000 and the restricted value of the house after the release is £5,000.

2. X owns an area of building land and Y owns an adjoining area of building land. Y grants X an easement to lay a sewer across Y's land and X notifies the grant to the Commission. The date the easement is granted is May 1st, 1969, and the consideration paid for it is £1,000. Y purchased his land for £5,000 in 1968. The grant of the easement has not affected the current use value of Y's land which has remained at £500 ever since Y purchased it.

Y thus has a credit of £3,500 (Schedule 11, paragraphs 3 and 5 (2)) which he can carry forward to set against the amount of levy arising out of a chargeable act or event in respect of the same land on a subsequent occasion. But Y's purchase price of £5,000 will not be available to him on any subsequent occasion as Schedule 5 base value.

3. A owns a plot of land X which he is about to develop for housing purposes. B owns an adjoining plot of land Y. B grants A a right of way over Y land, so as to build an access road to the highway, for £2,000. Y land is at present let as a playing field at £150 per annum, but it has planning permission for industrial development which would make it worth £750 per annum. As a result of the right of way over Y land, the

The increase of £100 per annum in the commercial value of Y land, as a result of the construction of the access road to the highway, will be reflected in the assessment of levy on a subsequent chargeable act or event, such as the material development, sale or lease of the land.

Case F

The main occasions upon which development value is realized are set out in Cases A to E in sections 29 to 34, inclusive. Part III of the Act with its schedules, and the regulations made under the Act, define how betterment levy is to be assessed in relation to chargeable acts or events falling within those cases. There are, however, a number of occurrences which, while basically similar to chargeable acts or events falling within Cases A to E, differ sufficiently in detail to require some adaptation of the main provisions in order to meet their special circumstances. These occurrences are all gathered together under Case F. Section 35, which deals with Case F, provides for the making of regulations under the section and the Case F General Regulations 1967 have been made by the Minister of Housing and Local Government. These regulations specify what are to be chargeable acts or events in Case F and, together with the Case F Supplemental Regulations 1967, make the necessary adaptations for the purpose of assessing betterment levy. Needless to say, Case F is not a little involved.

The types of occurrences to which the regulations can apply in England and Wales are set out in section 35 (2) (3) and (5) and are as follows:

(1) Any disposition, otherwise than under Case A, B or E, which is made for valuable consideration and fulfils one or both of the following conditions:

(a) that it renews or extends a tenancy;

(b) that it varies the terms and conditions of a tenancy by releasing or modifying a covenant or agreement whereby the development of any land comprised in the tenancy is restricted;

(2) Any disposition, otherwise than under Case A, B or E, which is made for valuable consideration and is a disposition granting to a Government department, statutory undertakers or any other body a right to place, construct or maintain a main, pipe, cable, wire or other apparatus in, on, over or under land, any instrument whereby such a right is compulsorily acquired being treated as a disposition granting that right for valuable consideration;

(3) Any right to compensation for depreciation in the value of an interest in land under enactments other than those specified in section 33.

The first type of occurrence covers a variation of a tenancy which may take the form either of its renewal or extension, or of an alteration of its terms and conditions, and in practice is likely to be a combination of both, so that restrictions in a tenancy agreement may be altered to allow more development and at the same time the tenancy may be extended. The second type of occurrence concerns what is colloquially called a wayleave. If this were an actual easement it would fall under Case E, but a right or licence to use land may be granted, commonly in the context of compulsory powers which, while very similar to an easement, does not have the same legal status. The third type of occurrence covers miscellaneous payments for compensation for depreciation in the value of land, resulting from the exercise of statutory powers enabling works to be carried out on the land.

Notification

Many occurrences embraced by Case F can take place without any development value being realized. Thus, the terms of a tenancy of a shop may be varied to allow the carrying on of some different trade; or electricity pylons may be placed on farmland in return for a standardized payment made to cover the damage caused to the agricultural use of the land. In the first case, by virtue of section 99 (2) and regulation 3 (2) (a) of the Material Development Regulations 1967, the change of use would not be material development and would not therefore attract levy in Case C, while in the second case the payment is limited to injury to current use, so that in neither case would development value be present on which levy could be assessed. The regulations therefore provide that occurrences under Case F are chargeable acts or events only if they are voluntarily notified to the Commission, so that the grantee may notify where he considers development value to have been realized.

If the grantee decides to notify he must do so within thirty days of the disposition or payment of the compensation unless the Commission extend the time, and the notification must be in accordance with the Betterment Levy (Notification) Regulations 1967, as modified by regulation 7 (3) of the Case F General Regulations 1967.

Basis of assessment

The basis of assessment under Case F differs according to the category of chargeable act or event referred to above as (1), (2) and (3). In the first category levy will be charged on a modified Case B assessment; in the second category it will be charged on a modified Case E assessment, and in the third category it will be charged on a modified Case D assessment. These different methods of assessment will be discussed in the next article.

Consequential Loss Insurance

by G. P. BARTLETT, A.C.A., A.C.I.L.A., F.C.I.I.

CONSEQUENTIAL loss, or 'profits', insurance has developed only over the last fifty years. Prior to 1939 many policies insured a fixed percentage of the material loss which, of course, might bear no relationship to the real consequential loss following a fire. In 1939, however, the 'standard' policy was adopted by the tariff offices and current practice is more sophisticated.

An essential pre-requisite

Policies today seek to reimburse the gross profit element of turnover lost as a result of a fire or other insured peril. There is still a connection with the material loss, in that a payment for material damage is an essential prerequisite of a consequential loss payment. For example, when the overheating of electric cables in a factory caused considerable smoke but no fire within the meaning of the policy, the employees panicked and a day's production was lost. Before the consequential loss insurers could indemnify their insured, £5 worth of decoration damage had to be found to satisfy this policy condition.

Consider the effects of fire on the business of, for example, a light engineering works which may be making typewriters or cameras or clocks or motor accessories, or what you will. Assume there is a productive labour force of about two hundred, plus clerical and administrative staff numbering thirty.

One night fire breaks out and destroys 50 per cent of the building, some quite important plant, some stock-in-trade and work in progress. The employees arrive in the normal way at about 8.30 a.m., to find the fire brigade damping down and the managing director distracted. It is quite evident that little or no production is possible; and even if some partial production were possible, this would not really help because a bottleneck would rapidly build up through the loss of certain essential plant.

Now perhaps you, the reader, will imagine yourself as the managing director. The first thing you will do is to contact your broker or insurance company, and I as the adjuster duly arrive later in the morning. You would first take me on a tour of the works and together we would consider the cause of the fire and try to assess in broad terms the extent of the material loss. Then, with other senior staff, we start to consider how best to restore the business.

Immediate problems

After some discussion we might summarize your immediate problems as follows:

- (1) Because buffer stocks of finished products are small, the breakdown of production inevitably means that sales will dry up within forty-eight hours.
- (2) Nevertheless, the productive labour force must be paid, and we might assume that your minimum weekly wage bill is £3,000 excluding overtime.
- (3) You make no secret of the fact that you are under-capitalized and financial resources are limited. You have a bank balance of about £5,000, while outstanding debtors more or less balance with outstanding creditors.
- (4) Apart from the productive labour force, you have administrative and clerical salaries to pay, plus other overheads such as rent, rates, lighting and heating, telephones, etc., which together may all add up to, perhaps, another £3,000 per week.
- (5) Not least, you have important contracts to complete on time, which may be lost if other

Why not employ an Aristocrat?

An impeccable background dating back to the very beginning of mechanized office equipment. A penchant for fitting in to any sort of Company . . . and an ability to adapt to any system. Superbly elegant appearance, and utterly dependable under pressure. Yes, why not employ the Remington ARISTOCRAT accounting machine . . . fast, economical, incomparably efficient . . . this is the machine with ALL the plus features.

Time saving abbreviations on a simplified keyboard: Choice of carriage lengths: Multiple Registers: Variety of front feeds. There is the Aristocrat 600 range—or the Aristocrat 700 range with 4 to 25 registers. Fast, economical machines that make easy work of man-size jobs for any type of business. Unlike so many other accounting machines the ARISTOCRAT is supremely flexible, adapting to virtually any system.

If your secretary will be kind enough to complete the coupon we will send you a comprehensive and informative brochure on this remarkable accounting machine.

I would try to satisfy you that our efforts over the next few months must be treated as a temporary partnership, between you and myself as agent of your insurers. You, of course, know all about your business, whereas I do not. I understand the insurance aspects, and you probably do not. To achieve our mutual objective of restoring the business in such a way as to mitigate your long-term loss of goodwill and the insurer's shorter term loss, we must operate as a partnership and endeavour to understand each other's point of view.

In a nutshell, my job as representative of the insurers who are going to have to pay the loss is to gain an appreciation of your business problem, to try to make positive suggestions as to how to solve it, and to explain how the consequential loss policy can best be used to that end.

How the policy operates

I would therefore at the outset explain to you how the policy operates.

First, it stipulates the maximum indemnity period, commencing with the day of the fire, for which the policy remains liable. This period was chosen by you or your board when the policy was set up and may range from three months to several years, depending on the nature of your business. This is the maximum period for which the policy will pay, but this maximum will, we hope, exceed the actual period taken to restore the business. Eventually we will have to agree the actual period during which the interruption continued (the indemnity period) and we will then compare the financial results of this period with the same period a year earlier.

The policy suggests that we take turnover or sales as a yardstick. This, however, will not preclude us from using output or any other factor which may be appropriate. The policy works on the assumption that each £1 of turnover contributes an equal share of (a) prime or variable costs; (b) overhead or standing charges; and (c) net profit. The intention of the policy is to reimburse the second and third of these as a proportion of lost turnover, and this we will reduce to a rate of 'gross profit' for purposes of calculation.

However, the policy does not stop there. It also covers increases in costs of working, which are defined as 'additional expenditure necessarily and reasonably incurred for the sole purpose of avoiding or diminishing a reduction in turnover'. For example, we may decide to rent a temporary building while yours is being rebuilt; or to hire some temporary plant whilst yours is being repaired. These would represent increases in normal costs of working and would qualify under the above definition. I would take care, however, to explain that certain limits are stipulated in the policy, the most obvious of which is that insurers will not pay more than £1 to save £1 of gross profit.

Conversely, when we come to work out the final figures in several months' time, we will deduct any 'savings' you may have achieved. Thus, because your factory was extensively damaged you may have had a cesser or reduction of rent or of rates; or you may have had to lay off some staff temporarily. These 'savings', as they are called, would naturally be offset against your loss.

Policy flexibility

The policy makes adequate provision for variations or trends in the business, and this makes the standard policy one of the most flexible documents to operate. There is no limit to the variations which may be taken into account in endeavouring to assess how the business would have behaved but for the fire.

A 'profits' policy is subject to the provision that if the sum insured is inadequate, the amount of the loss must be scaled down proportionately. Far too many businesses find themselves under-insured through failure to revise the sum insured year by year, and I as adjuster will have no choice but to take this into account in the claim settlement.

At the outset I may be able to assess whether under-insurance will apply, and if so I shall certainly tell you, so that you will be fully aware of the proportion of the loss you yourself are going to carry.

Wages cover

Finally, we may at this early stage be able to consider the extent of your insurance on the biggest single item of productive cost, namely wages. Modern policies may cover this in several different ways and only an examination of your own policy will show how it is dealt with in your particular case. The basis used may well be the 'dual wages basis' which provides full cover for the first few weeks, and a reduced percentage of cover thereafter to the end of the indemnity period.

There are numerous permutations but they all carry what is called 'an option to consolidate'. This means that after the business is restored, you may look back and decide whether it is to your financial advantage to consolidate the wages cover to a 100 per cent basis for a certain specified number of weeks.

However, even if we consider this briefly on the first day we will need to return to it again after a week or two to consider what further action is needed in order to use this part of the insurance to the best advantage.

We may have decided, then, that the factory building will take at least three months to reinstate; the plant rather less, although one foreign machine may prove tricky; whilst raw materials should not be a major problem. Finance being a problem, I shall recommend an interim payment, which will make a positive contribution to your recovery. Every effort will be made to rent alternative accommodation, failing which a temporary building might be erected. Plant repairs will be put in hand urgently, and a search instituted for a suitable replacement, new or otherwise, for the foreign machine.

Temporarily, we shall subcontract some production to maintain partial output, and in addition we shall cut out the least important lines. The sales manager will notify customers of the fire and its effects, and arrange new delivery schedules. For the moment, the labour force will be retained, but this aspect will need to be reviewed after a couple of weeks in the light of progress.

The auditor's part

What part can the insured's auditor or accountant play? Initially, he can advise on the financial repercussions of the fire; and he may be able to help negotiate financial help. He can study the profits policy and comment on the advice given by the adjuster. At the end, he can prepare certified figures for submission to the adjuster.

Optional extensions

His fee for these services may or may not be insured by a separate item in the policy. This is just one of many 'optional extensions' which are available. Others include:

- (a) an extension to include loss or damage at premises of specified suppliers which may be of vital importance to interdependent businesses;
- (b) cover for loss through prevention of access, (e.g. where a shop is in an arcade which might be closed to pedestrians in an emergency);

(c) cover against loss caused by an insured peril occurring at the gas, electricity or waterworks of the public undertaking to which the insured are connected;

(d) cover against loss caused by food poisoning, murder, or suicide, which would be of importance to an hotel or restaurant.

As an example of the latter – a few years ago a woman booked an hotel room for herself and two children and their pet dogs. Next day staff had to force the door and found the children and dogs dead; the woman's body was later found on a railway line not far away. This was on a Saturday and the Sunday newspapers had a field day. Before the claim was settled – after months of lost bookings – the hotel's name was changed and an advertising campaign was mounted to provide a new 'image'.

Profits claims are not always as dramatic as this but to the adjuster all are deeply absorbing, providing an intimate involvement for a time with a diverse range of businesses.

On the day after a fire, the material loss is an established fact and requires only to be quantified. The consequential loss, however, has not yet occurred; it will accrue to a greater or lesser extent depending on the actions taken. The profits adjuster knows that there is an opportunity for him to help his principals and their insured, from the outset, by the advice he gives and the effort he is prepared to make, and this invariably presents an exciting challenge.

Special Investigations and Reports – IV

Preparing the Report

THE previous articles in this series dealt in some detail with each type of investigation. We now come to the investigating accountant's report on the observations, results and conclusions of his examination.

Although, of course, the form of report will vary with the requirements of each type of investigation, there are a number of common basic principles. All reports should be clear, concise, accurate, and so phrased that only one interpretation can be placed upon the wording. It is important to bear in mind that although the accountant is reporting primarily to the instructing party, copies of his report may be passed to others – e.g. assessors, bank officials, legal and other advisers, even perhaps to a trial judge – who may be interested in its contents. Again, the client may require the report, following some types of investigation, to disclose all the relevant facts to enable him to take appropriate policy decisions.

After precisely identifying the instructing party (if other than the addressee), his terms of reference and the exact nature and scope of the examination, the investigating accountant will proceed with the body of his report which will be compiled from several sources. It will have been noted from the previous articles on the work involved in various types of investigations, that interviews with third parties are frequently necessary in order to corroborate or disprove what has emerged from the examination of books, accounts and documents. It will thus be appreciated how important the notes and memos made concerning such meetings become when the accountant is preparing his report. (Incidentally all notes and working papers should be retained after the completion of the report in case future reference becomes necessary.)

Where relevant, the report will contain extracts from documents which appear to be of importance, such as minutes, agreements, leases, etc. And any instances where access to any books, accounts or documents have been refused will certainly be mentioned.

Of much importance to the reporting accountant will be the columnar accounts and supporting schedules he has prepared. These should be dealt with in detail, the client's attention being drawn to significant percentages (showing seasonal or other trends) and similar items before and after a significant date (which in the case of a claim would be the event, e.g. fire, burglary or accident); and whether there has been any decline, gradual or steep, over a period of time for any special reason. These trends and percentages – not often evident from a normal set of accounts – are of vital importance to the client. The accountant will naturally mention any adjustments he has made to the original figures and the reason for so doing.

The previous articles in this series appeared in the issues of December 17th, 1966; and February 11th and March 18th, 1967.

Accountant not a valuer

The accountant should remember that he is not a valuer or a forecaster. This would be dangerous ground which he should be careful to avoid in his report, except in so far as he is able to quote from experts in these matters. He will often, however, have to study the reports of other such experts and he may therefore make relevant comments where he feels these to be necessary. He may even ask for more information in support of those reports.

The investigating accountant's report should be drawn up so that the client can follow the nature of the examination and see that his instructions have been carried out. It may be that on receiving and considering the report, the client will call in other advisers and arrange for a conference at which the accountant may be asked to expand or elaborate certain sections or aspects of his report. Or he may even be asked to investigate further and present a supplementary report.

In a claims investigation the accountant may prepare alternative claims, drawing attention to the difference between his own computations and the figures he has investigated. Counsel may well use such alternative figures as a basis for his work in the case, or in negotiating a settlement. Nor should it be overlooked that if the matter at issue goes for statutory inquiry or trial, the accountant may be called as an expert witness and cross-examined. Herein, of course, lies one of the main reasons why investigation work is usually undertaken by an experienced qualified senior clerk or the principal himself. For as previously emphasized a wide knowledge of all branches of accountancy and auditing is required, as well as familiarity with many trades and industries and unique points relevant to each.

Back duty cases fall in a different category. There will not be one but several reports – all to the Inspector of Taxes. They take on a form of their own in that at each stage the accountant is asked to prepare more and more schedules which need to be explained in great detail, often item by item. This continues until the accountant feels that he has exhausted every avenue of inquiry and has obtained all the relevant information he can possibly hope for. The final report will then be called for, and as previously mentioned, the importance of a serious talk with the client before the latter signs the Certificate of Non-Disclosure cannot be over-stressed. The offer to be made will be the subject of most careful consideration.

Investigation reports under the Companies Act are usually drawn up in the prescribed form and contain all that is required by statute; in this connection any relevant recommendations or pronouncements of professional bodies should be kept in mind.

Reports on the valuation of shares should be comprehensive, and contain all the facts that have been taken into account before the final figure has been arrived at. It should not be forgotten that several methods may be used and an average struck. Reasons as to why a particular method is or is not acceptable should also be stated.

In reports addressed to a bank relating to the granting of credit to a client, the accountant will naturally state the facts requested as favourably as possible though without, of course, in any way misleading the bankers. (For example, reference may be made to potentially favourable, though currently unrealized, prospects.) Here, again, the report assumes a rather specialized form in view of the fact that it is mainly a report on the accounts and figures and the breakdown thereof. However, the past history of the client, the nature of business undertaken and particulars of future contracts etc., will all need to be mentioned.

In reports on investigations into fraud or suspected fraud, details of the work undertaken will be given and the information which has been uncovered. It would not, in such reports, be out of place to draw attention to any weaknesses in the system and to make recommendations for improvement or security precautions which might be introduced. In other cases, however, it is no duty of the accountant to venture beyond his instructions; for example, any question of negligence in an accident and liability arising therefrom is not his concern, should he be engaged in an investigation where such matters are involved.

Any conclusions which the investigating accountant has drawn are, of course, of vital importance. He must be careful that these are not expressed dogmatically but are presented as opinions. He should further avoid making any remarks which are irrelevant or outside the scope of the inquiry. While all the contents of the report are of importance, it is nevertheless to the 'conclusions' section that the client will turn with the greatest interest. If a definite conclusion has not been reached through the investigation, then the question of alternatives should be dealt with. Sometimes it is preferable to give only a 'lead' as opposed to a final decision, and the investigating accountant should then suggest to his client the next step to be taken and any other factors that need to be considered.

Basic principles

Although this series of articles was written mainly for students in order to give some idea of the general background of this specialized type of work which forms a considerable part of some practices it is, as previously stated, primarily the task of qualified senior staff or principals. The object has been to show the student how the basic principles of his studies may be called into use and therefore how sound and wide his knowledge should be.

In the writer's opinion, this type of work (other than the detailed copying of schedules etc.), should not be undertaken by any one with less than five or six years' qualified experience. It is only experience, coupled with knowledge, that can produce an expert. In assignments of some magnitude, however, senior students may gain experience as one of the investigating team. In any event, after qualification a period as a 'junior' in such work is also very necessary.

Tact and judgement are highly essential qualities, especially if the accountant is likely to be called as an expert witness and cross-examined by counsel. The fact that he should have a sound knowledge of all fields of accountancy cannot be repeated too often; and the greater the number and variety of businesses dealt with, the wider will be his scope and knowledge of special points attaching to each.

Reorganization of Federal Taxation Division

MAJOR reorganization of the Taxation Division of the Canadian Revenue Department has recently been announced, involving the creation of three new branches. A Compliance Branch will develop measures for ensuring taxpayer co-operation and for dealing more effectively with tax avoidance practices. An Operations Branch will be responsible for executing the department's policies and programmes, and the twenty nine district offices and data centre will report to this branch. Long-range planning and changes in tax policies and legislation will be the concern of a Planning and Research Branch, which will include specialists in programme planning and evaluation, systems research, taxation policy and tax agreements with other Governments.

New Statement on Auditing

A NEW statement on auditing, relating to electronic data processing systems has recently been issued by the National Council of Chartered Accountants (S.A.) in view of the great importance which the rapidly growing development and use of E.D.P. systems has assumed, not only for accountants engaged in administration and management of financial, commercial and industrial undertakings, but also for those in public practice.

The first part of the statement is devoted to a description of E.D.P. systems in general. It is said that:

"The auditor cannot be expected to be an expert in the science of electronics or to understand the technical aspects of E.D.P. equipment or to be capable of programming, but in order to appreciate the problems which will face him and to be able to determine the best means of overcoming them, it is essential for him to know something of the practical aspects of the equipment."

The statement then goes on to describe E.D.P. equipment in common use at the present time, the various methods of processing data, programming and documentation procedures, and the institution of internal control features.

Attention is then directed to auditing considerations in relation to E.D.P. systems. The problems relating to the changed nature of the audit trail, and the departure from normal internal control concepts brought about by the concentration in the one E.D.P. department of most internal control features, are discussed at length. Suggestions are made as to the manner in which the auditor should set about tackling these problems, the approach being broken up into four sections: (i) the design of the system; (ii) input data; (iii) the processing operations, and (iv) output data. Variations in audit procedure when the client employs a service bureau instead of having its own installation are discussed, and the section concludes with a summary of the basic means of establishing an audit trail in a well-designed system.

As a whole, the statement forms a substantial and valuable contribution to the body of basic knowledge of the subject which is available to the general practitioner. It will undoubtedly also be of considerable help to the student in his preparation for examinations. The use of E.D.P. systems in South Africa is expanding at an ever-increasing rate and it is inevitable that every auditor will, sooner rather than later, come into contact with such a system. The new auditing statement (No. 3 in the South African Chartered Accountant's Handbook series) will go a long way towards assisting members of the profession to prepare for the new problems they will have to face.

Ten Shilling Decimal Better than £

THE ten shilling dollar system was the most suited for New Zealand's need despite the British Government's decision to have a decimal currency system based on the £, declared Mr Robert Muldoon, New Zealand's Minister of Finance, addressing a recent seminar on decimal currency in Wellington.

Mr Muldoon said that at ten shillings and current exchange rates, New Zealand's dollar would be the highest valued dollar in the world. 'If we had closed our eyes to the benefits and advantages of a simpler system and decided to make do with pounds, shillings and pence, we would have been faced with a serious situation when Britain changes over to decimal currency in 1971,' said Mr Muldoon.

He added that no manufacturer would be prepared to cater for the special machine requirements of a relatively

WATCH YOUR LANGUAGE

NOW I.C.T. offer a commercial language compiler that gets a computer into action quicker—and so makes it productive earlier. New 1900 Series COBOL is a full-scale COBOL. Written in basic English in a standard format, it is easy to learn, write and amend. And it can be used on computers costing as little as £70,000.

Savings from the Outset

The new full-scale COBOL compiler has programs ready, tested and running much quicker because it needs only  $\frac{1}{3}$  of the program-writing time of other low-level languages and  $\frac{1}{2}$  of the (assembly code) debugging time.

Savings on the Run

Program development and ad hoc jobs can be dealt with faster during normal running because less programmer and machine time is needed for necessary—but unproductive—testing. Typical compilation speed: 600 statements per minute.

Special note: Because COBOL documentation is standard, not only are programming training costs reduced, but the same program can be carried through without delay even if there is a change in programming staff.

C.P.A.s' Indictment for Fraud

A RECENT issue of The Journal of Accountancy (New York) reported that last October two partners and a staff member of Messrs Lybrand, Ross Bros & Montgomery were charged with conspiring to defraud. The firm as a whole was named as co-conspirator, not defendant, and the company involved was Continental Vending Machine Corporation. In a statement to the Press the firm's managing partner called the indictment shocking and unwarranted, particularly since the firm had been advised by the Government that representatives of leading accounting firms, called by the Government before the grand jury, had unanimously upheld the position taken by the firm. It was the withholding of the firm's certification from Continental's 1962 annual report to the Securities and Exchange Commission that precipitated action by the Commission and the Courts. Stating that, essentially, the firm was being accused of having failed to second-guess Continental's management and directors in the conduct of its business affairs, the managing partner emphasized that this had never been the auditor's function. As to the conspiracy charge, he stated that the firm's relations with Continental were entirely professional and the firm was confident that full disclosure of its actions would establish its innocence and build up a greater public confidence in the principles of its public accounting system.

Chloride Electrical

THE report and accounts of The Chloride Electrical Storage Co Ltd leave little to be desired in the manner of their presentation and the extent of the information supplied. This week's reprint endeavours to cover the extensive ground so far as space will allow.

This year all the main figures in the accounts are in round thousands of pounds as an aid to clarity. Last year the profit and loss account opened with the sales figure but because of exceptional items affecting the profit position in 1966, and the comparison with last year, the account opens this time with the group trading profit. In arriving at the 1966 results, the profits of the Indian companies for the year to August 31st (their financial year-end), have been converted into sterling at the devalued rate of exchange which became effective in June 1966.

Mr Edward Powell, the chairman, states in his review that the adverse effect of this devaluation (£57,000) on profit attributable to parent company shareholders is considerably less than the effect on group trading profit and group profit before tax (in both cases £234,000) due to Indian high taxation and minority interests. Comparisons of 1966 profit and turnover with 1965 and previous years must, of course, take this into account.

Turnover, apart from the rupee factor, was checked by a fall in the United Kingdom automotive battery turnover during the second half of last year.

Investment Grants

In comparing pre-tax profits—£3,440,000 in 1966 against £4,031,000 in 1965—three main points have to be taken into account. There was a £105,000 increase in interest charges, and commissioning expenses of a new factory totalled £198,000. In 1965 there was an exceptional profit from scrap lead of £342,000 which was not repeated in 1966.

The fall in the price of lead helped earnings in 1966 but the chairman says 'it is not practicable to quantify the advantage in 1966 from the lower lead cost because it cannot be estimated what selling prices would have been if lead costs had not come down'.

Treatment of investment grants was decided on the basis shown in Note 5 to the accounts, with grants receivable deducted from fixed assets and depreciation calculated on the net costs after taking the grants into account. Calculations of replacement depreciation have, however, been based on the full costs 'as there can be no certainty that investment grants will be available when the assets are due for replacement'.

Following a policy established for fifteen years, £125,000 has been transferred to replacement reserve. As a result of study, indices more 'appropriate to the group's business' have been adopted from January 1st, 1966. The transfer to be made each year, the chairman explains, necessarily varies because of the differing amounts of old assets disposed of and the degree of inflation each year.

S.E.T. Rebate

Under selective employment tax the United Kingdom companies in the group are eligible for net repayments at an annual rate of some £80,000 – the benefit, as shareholders are reminded, being offset by the time-lag between payment and repayment and also by taxation.

Capital expenditure in 1966 amounted to £2,804,000, which was £96,000 more than in 1965, and the decrease in commitments and plans turns on the completion of projects involved in the high 1965–66 spending period.

In the notes a considerable increase in the market value of quoted trade investments is shown. This is due to a further increase in the Madrid stock-market value of the company's holding in a Spanish battery company and an increase in the number of shares held.

Tables 1, 2 and 3, which are included in the reprint, are placed at the end of the chairman's review. Proportions in Table 1, it is pointed out, are affected by differing rates of taxation and by minority interests. Because of changes in the group structure Table 1 is not comparable with that shown in last year's accounts which accounts, presumably, for the lack of comparative figures.

Narrative repeated

The ten-year summary, included in the reprint, besides providing the ten-year record of turnover, profit appropriations and employment and source of funds, sets out under 'Statistics' the figures that matter in terms of true assessment of group performance. In the original, the ten-year summary has the narrative repeated at the right-hand side of a double-page opening and this is a decidedly useful assistance to reading.

The final three pages of the report are given over to a 'run-down' on the group by divisions, giving the names of subsidiary companies (and, where necessary, the percentage of capital owned), the location of the works and the products. The European and Overseas battery divisions (Chloride, Exide and Dagenite being the trade names most recognizable to the public) are the main operational force. Chloride Industries Division covers tool-making, control valves, compressors, plastics, barrier creams, sanitary ware and porous plastic materials, and it was in the latter sphere that the factory commissioning costs, already mentioned, were incurred.

Synthetic leather is another new sphere for the group, and the group is also interested in a process for coating textiles for waterproofing and air permeability.

Looking at 1967 the chairman anticipates further progress by overseas companies but, in view of the uncertain home outlook, it is not considered possible to make any reliable forecast for the group as a whole.

2 GROUP TRADING PROFIT
The Indian rupee was devalued on 5th June 1966. The profit of the Indian subsidiary companies for the whole year ended 31st August 1966 has been converted into sterling at the devalued rate of the rupee. The profit for 1966 would have been greater by £234,000 before taxation and £57,000 after taxation and minority interest if it had been converted at the rate of exchange prior to devaluation used for the 1965 accounts

THE CHLORIDE ELECTRICAL STORAGE COMPANY LIMITED

NOTES ON ACCOUNTS

1 ACCOUNTING DATES

The accounts of subsidiary companies abroad other than in Europe are made up to 31st August, 1966 and, in accordance with the Group's normal practice, such accounts have been included in the consolidated accounts at 31st December, 1966. In the opinion of the Directors this variation in dates facilitates the prompt publication of the Group's results.

2 OVERSEAS PROFITS, ASSETS AND LIABILITIES

These have been converted at the rates ruling at 31st December, 1966 except that fixed assets and the relative depreciation have been converted at the rates ruling at the dates of acquisition where the particular currency has depreciated materially.

3 RESERVES

The movements during the year were:

Per Consolidated Balance Sheet	13,183	6,289	5,908	986

Depreciation has been calculated, after taking into account investment grants receivable, on a straight line basis by reference to the normal lives of assets.

Leasehold buildings are included above at written down values of £960,000 (1965 £929,000). Of these £37,000 (1965 £37,000) relates to leasehold buildings where the term unexpired is less than 50 years.

The fixed assets of the Parent Company are stated on page 15* after deduction of accumulated depreciation of £27,000 (1965 £19,000).

RESERVE FOR REPLACEMENT

The estimated cost of replacement of the fixed assets of the Group has been calculated, before taking into account investment grants, by reference to price indices and the replacement depreciation required by applying thereto the appropriate rates of depreciation based on the normal lives of these assets.

The policy of the Group is to provide in full for the increased cost of replacement as regards plant, machinery and other equipment but not as regards buildings.

The relevant information as regards plant, machinery and other equipment is as follows:—

	1966 £000	1965 £000
Estimated Cost of Replacement	18,650	17,161
Replacement Depreciation Required	10,664	9,959
Depreciation set aside:
Depreciation based on cost	6,513	5,957
Reserve for Replacement of Fixed Assets in Consolidated Balance Sheet	3,822	3,697
Attributable to Minority Interests	329	318
	1,0664	9,972

The result of the change in indices and the disposal of old assets referred to in the Chairman's statement on page 3* have been taken into account in arriving at the 1966 transfer.

The estimated Replacement Cost of buildings was £11,189,000 compared with a cost of £7,824,000.

6 TRADE INVESTMENTS

	1966 Group £000	1966 Parent £000	1965 Group £000	1965 Parent £000
Shares
at cost less amounts written off:

Loans	132	132	137	137
	301	274	234	227
Market Value of Quoted Shares	545	543	308	305

If the quoted Shares were realised at the market value in Madrid set out above, the capital gain would attract Corporation Tax of £87,000. In these calculations the investment dollar premium has been ignored.

7 STOCKS

These have been valued at the lower of cost and net realisable value. Cost in the case of products manufactured by the Group consists of direct material and labour costs together with the relevant variable factory overheads.

8 PROVISIONS

9 TAXATION

The accumulated capital allowances claimed for the purposes of United Kingdom corporation tax or overseas taxation exceed the related accumulated depreciation shown in the consolidated accounts to 31st December, 1966 by £1,769,000 (1965 £1,640,000).

The unappropriated profits of overseas subsidiary companies if distributed as dividends are liable to United Kingdom and/or overseas taxation subject to Double Taxation Relief.

10 CAPITAL EXPENDITURE

The outstanding commitments for capital expenditure for which provision has not been made in the accounts are:

	1966 £000	1965 £000
Group	640	1,228
Parent	—	7

In addition to the above approval has been given for expenditure during 1967 and future years of £809,000 (1965 £1,175,000) although commitments have not been entered into.

11 CONTINGENT LIABILITIES

The Parent Company had contingent liabilities at 31st December, 1966 amounting to £1,003,000 (1965 £892,000) in respect of bank guarantees on behalf of subsidiary companies.

Note 1 The dividend cover for 1966 is not comparable with previous years because of the alterations in the United Kingdom tax system introduced in the Finance Act 1965.

Note 2 This represents the profit attributable to the Parent Company expressed as a percentage of the shareholders average funds at the beginning and end of each year.

Note 3 This represents the profit after taxation but before charging interest expressed as a percentage of the average total funds employed at the beginning and end of each year.

Note 4 The return before taxation on shareholders average funds for the last five years has been added to provide a measure of comparability, because of the changes introduced by the Finance Act 1965.

CITY NOTES

THE British ordinary share market has gone ahead rather too fast and needs a correction. The fixed-interest market should maintain its strength and move gradually upwards but the long-term possibilities for the economy are such as to justify switching during the summer months out of fixed-interest stocks into ordinary shares, which are likely to stand higher at the end of the year than they do today.

That summing-up of the current market situation by a prominent firm of London stockbrokers is representative of current stock-market thinking. Share prices may be too high for the present but not necessarily high enough for the future.

Such a view hardly suggests that much, if anything, will be done about the 'too high for the present' situation. Last Monday week, in a highly professional and technical exercise, eight points were knocked off the main equity index in a day. In the following four that loss was more than made good and since then the market has stayed relatively firm.

The timing of steel nationalization may well prove to be the factor carrying the equity market successfully over the summer setback anticipated earlier. The movement from steel shares into other equities can be expected to exert considerable money weight on a market where the weight of money is already causing pressure on prices.

It may, on an industrial earnings and dividend basis, be difficult to justify a major equity rise but that does not necessarily mean that the rise will not develop.

WESTMINSTER Bank's decision to enter the unit trust field in conjunction with Hambros Bank means that two of the 'big five' banks have now taken the unit trust plunge. The first Westminster-Hambros trust is expected to be floated by July. There was some surprise in the City that Westminster had decided to draw on Hambros Bank's investment expertise and unit trust administration facilities rather than make the trust an entirely Westminster operation. That was particularly so since Westminster Bank itself has been prominent in operating in what is considered to be the merchant banking sphere.

MID-APRIL figures from the clearing banks have shown that although credit is cheaper and more readily available it is not exactly in strong demand. In the five weeks' period to the middle of last month, bank advances rose £31.7 million after a reduction of £7.5 million in loans to nationalized industries. Seasonally, a rise of £60 million would be little out of the ordinary. There is, as yet, little indication that industry has the confidence to borrow on a major scale and it is officially admitted that there was no significant lending trend during the March-April period.

PRUDENTIAL Assurance's pressure against Second Premier trust – the executive incentive trust – has had its just reward in agreement by Rediffusion directors to relinquish their shares and to hand over a sum in respect of their participation in Second Premier through other Rediffusion companies. Prudential's success comes as the result of the action of an institutional shareholder doing something that shareholders as a body might not have achieved. Prudential has acted behind the scenes whereas shareholders would probably have had to come out into the open with special meetings called and votes – possibly unsuccessfully – taken. The institutional role as an individual shareholder is not an easy one, but City opinion is that the Prudential has played it particularly well.

The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants

Report of the Council

Extracts from the annual report of the Council of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants to be presented to the forty-eighth annual general meeting of members on Saturday, May 13th, at the Connaught Rooms, Great Queen Street, London WC2

DURING the year there were 242 admissions to membership and, after allowing for resignations, lapsed memberships and deaths, the total membership at December 31st, 1966, was 9,569, showing a net increase of 137 over the previous year. This low intake of members is an expected result of the introduction of the five-part examination in 1964.

Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services

The scheme for a Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services came into operation on January 1st, 1966.

The first chairman of the Joint Board was Mr W. S. Risk, B.COM., C.A., F.C.W.A. He was succeeded in June by Mr S. R. Harding, F.C.A. The other I.C.W.A. representatives on the Board, in addition to Mr Risk, were Messrs W. Bishop, C.A., F.C.W.A., J. Borsay, F.C.W.A., and I. T. Morrow, C.A., F.C.W.A. Mr Borsay retired as an I.C.W.A. representative in June and was succeeded by Mr C. E. Sutton, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., J.DIP.M.A.

The necessary legislation having been passed in the Republic of Ireland and in Northern Ireland, The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland officially joined the scheme in September.

Under the provisions of the scheme, joint diplomas were awarded to 255 Fellows of the Institute who passed the former Fellowship Examination in Management Accountancy. Joint diplomas were also awarded to twelve candidates who passed Part II of the examination having been exempted from Part I under the transitional provisions of the scheme applicable to candidates aged over 40 on January 1st, 1966.

The Council hopes that an increasing number of members will support the scheme.

Registered students

During the year there were 5,325 new student registrations and, after allowing for transfers to membership, resignations, lapsed registrations and deaths, there were 22,215 names on the students' register at December 31st, 1966, as compared with 20,179 at the end of 1965.

Memorandum, articles of association and by-laws

A revised edition of the Institute's memorandum, articles of association and by-laws was published in April incorporating all the amendments agreed upon since the previous edition appeared in 1962. These amendments were principally concerned with the Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services, conditions of admission to Fellow and Associate membership, disciplinary procedures, committee structure and conditions for the award of the practising certificate.

Institute research scholarships

Two residential research scholarships, of six months' duration, have been provided by the Institute at Nottingham University starting on October 1st. From twenty-seven companies who were invited to nominate candidates fifteen nominations were received.

The two members selected were Mr D. P. Frost, A.C.W.A., a trainee accountant with the National Coal Board, and Mr R. I. Oddy, A.C.A., A.C.W.A., head of the capital authorizations and audit section of Imperial Chemical Industries. Mr Frost has chosen the research topic: 'Economics of the operation of central coal preparation plants with particular reference to the allocation of coal preparation costs to products and qualities and apportionments to mines'; Mr Oddy has chosen for his study: 'Risk analysis'.

Ninth International Congress of Accountants

As a result of an announcement in Management Accounting and of a leaflet sent to members in May, over one hundred and fifty members tentatively indicated their intention to participate in the Ninth International Congress of Accountants to be held in Paris from September 6th to 12th, 1967. Full details, and an application form, were sent to the members concerned early in 1967.

Papers were prepared by Mr W. S. Risk, B.COM., C.A., F.C.W.A., international joint rapporteur on behalf of the Institute and of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, on the subject of 'Budgetary accounting and its prospects', and by Mr A. W. Howitt, M.A., F.C.A., F.C.W.A., J.DIP.M.A., and Mr J. B. C. Miller-Bakewell, M.A., F.C.W.A., J.DIP.M.A., national rapporteurs on, 'Accounting as a means of measuring productivity' and 'Measurement and communication of quantitative economic data', respectively.

Research and technical activities

There was a considerable increase in research and technical activities, with a corresponding intensification of the work of the Technical Department.

The Research and Technical Committee held two week-end policy review meetings in the early summer, at which they formulated plans for conducting additional research work, and for issuing new, and revising existing, technical publications.

A Branch Research Officers' conference was held in September.

In view of the increasing load on the Research and Technical Committee, a Publications Sub-Committee was appointed to deal specifically with the preparatory work necessary in connection with new and revised publications.

In June, the Institute was invited by the Department of Economic Affairs to nominate members to attend a one-day conference for representatives of management, on the implementation of the national plan for industry, prices and incomes policy and regional policy. Mr W. L. Spalding, a Vice-President of the Institute, was accompanied by Messrs A. W. Field, F.C.W.A., F.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M., H. J. Furness, F.C.W.A., J.DIP.M.A., F. Simmonds, F.C.W.A., A.M.B.I.M., and H. P. Southall, F.C.A., F.C.W.A.

The Institute was invited to give evidence to a working party set up by the Director of Accountancy Services, Ministry of Aviation (now part of the Ministry of Technology), with representatives of the Ministry of Defence, the Confederation of British Industry, the Society of British Aerospace Companies and the Electronic Engineering Association. The task of the working party was to consider some of the implications for industry and for Government departments in the recommendations regarding overhead costs made in the Second Report of the Lang Committee.

The Institute was invited to assist the Treasury's Management Accounting unit in preparing a glossary of management techniques, which was subsequently published by the Stationery Office.

The Institute continued to assist the British Productivity Council to prepare material for seminars in financial and costing methods, to be held for management in various parts of the country.

Numerous projects, in which the Institute participated with other professional bodies, were continued from the previous year, or were begun. Joint working parties with the Institution of Production Engineers continued their inquiry into the cost of variety (undertaken at the request of the Department of Economic Affairs) and into incentives for quality and reliability: work was also done on a booklet for the guidance of engineers on the application of costs. Members of the Operational Research Society joined representatives of the Institute in studying problems of planning of network-based projects and control of their costs (PERT). Three senior members served on a working party to advise the Department of Economic Affairs on the preparation of a booklet on the value of industrial costing for management.

The Institute continued to be represented on the United Kingdom Automation Council; the Congress and Finance Committees of the Fourth International Federation of Information Processing Congress, to be held in Edinburgh in 1968, the British Standards Institution, and the National Council for Quality and Reliability. At the request of the latter, a representative of the Institute served on a working party to consider the relationship between marketing and design. The Institute was invited to be represented at exploratory meetings concerned with the inauguration of a Long Range Planning Society.

Work was continued on a study for the Ministry of Labour on problems involved in the costing of training.

Institute representatives met the Director of the National Computing Centre to discuss areas of co-operation between the Institute and the Centre.

A memorandum on 'The pricing of Government contracts', was sent to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to other Ministers and to Government departments concerned with placing contracts. Several Ministries arranged for additional copies to be supplied to senior officials.

A memorandum on taxation, submitted to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, discussed new trends observed and the impact of taxation and inflation on management decisions.

A booklet describing the Government's scheme of investment grants, to be operated by the Board of Trade under Part I of the Industrial Development Act 1966, was distributed to all members in the United Kingdom in December.

Electronic data processing

Courses on computers for members and registered students were held at Bradenham Manor, High Wycombe, from February 10th to 12th and from March 4th to 6th; also at Thamesfield, Henley-on-Thames, from July 8th to 10th. The chairman of the first course was Mr E. B. Bishop, F.C.W.A., F.C.I.S., Chairman of the Research and Technical Committee. Mr L. N. Norton, F.C.W.A., acted as chairman for the second and third courses. At these courses generous help was given by lecturers from International Computers and Tabulators Ltd.

The Institute, as a member of the United Kingdom Automation Council, was one of the sponsors of the 1966 British Joint Computer Conference held at Eastbourne from May 3rd to 5th.

An important conference on electronic data processing was held in London on May 26th. One hundred and thirty-six members occupying responsible positions involving computer activities and concerned with a wide variety of computer applications in industry attended.

As a result of the conference E.D.P. Regional Study Groups were established to study and report upon a wide range of computer application problems. These groups are operating in the main industrial areas of the country, and are contributing material from the extensive experience of their members with the intention of publishing, in 1967, authoritative statements regarding computer applications.

Other courses and conferences

A high-level technical conference of senior members took place at Buxton from June 30th to July 2nd, replacing, as in 1965, the former national conference.

The seventeenth summer school was held at Balliol College, Oxford, by kind permission of the Master and Fellows, from Monday to Friday, September 12th to 16th.

Regional conferences organized by co-ordinating committees were again very well supported by members. The conferences at Norwich and St Helens were the first to be held there.

Residential week-end courses were organized by branches and area co-ordinating committees.

A one-day conference for teachers of cost and management accountancy was held at the City of Liverpool College of Commerce on January 29th. Organized jointly by the Institute and the College, it was attended by nearly sixty teachers from many parts of the country.

The branches and sub-branches

Two new branches came into being in 1966. Both had hitherto functioned as sub-branches. At Hull the sub-branch, formed by the Leeds and District Branch in 1949, became a branch on April 1st. Mr P. H. Blackburn, A.C.W.A., was elected the first President of the branch.

The Stoke-on-Trent Sub-Branch, formed by the Manchester and District Branch in 1946, became a branch on September 1st. Mr A. W. Cartwright, F.C.W.A., F.A.C.C.A., was elected the first President of the branch. The Stoke-on-Trent Branch serves a network of towns and holds meetings in Crewe, Newcastle-under-Lyme, Stafford, Stoke-on-Trent and Stone.

The conference of Branch Secretaries held in London in June was attended by representatives of branches and the Area Co-ordinating Committees, and by members of the Council.

The profession overseas

The number of members overseas continued to increase. The Institute has members in a total of seventy-one countries. Registrations of new students overseas also continued to increase; there are registered students preparing to take the Institute's examinations in a total of eighty-three countries outside the United Kingdom.

In South Africa preparations were made for the Seventh South African National Conference to be held at Cape Town in April, 1967. The Administrative Officer for South Africa, Miss K. M. Davidson, B.A., completed a round of visits, in the autumn, to all centres in South Africa.

The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants of India and The Institute of Chartered Accountants of India made preparation for an All-Indian Conference of Accountants to take place in Jaipur on January 27th, 28th and 29th, 1967. This was the first All-Indian event sponsored by the two Institutes. The theme of the conference was, "The accountant in a developing economy".

The future of the profession

In March, members were informed that discussions were taking place between the Institute and the other accountancy bodies listed below regarding the scope and structure of the accountancy profession in the United Kingdom, its standards of education and training, the basis, nature and designation of the qualifications which it provides and other related matters:

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland.

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland.

The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants.

The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants.

It was stated that the present intention was to bring other accountancy bodies into the discussions in due course and that the purpose of the discussions was to consider in what way in the public interest the profession could best be developed, in particular:

- (i) whether there was scope for reducing the number of separate professional bodies and qualifications in England and Wales, Scotland and Ireland respectively;
- (ii) whether changes should be made in the form, methods and standards of education, training and experience, bearing in mind the qualities now needed for the performance of the more advanced professional services, whether in public practice, industry, commerce or public service;

(iii) whether in the future there should be two recognized levels of professional qualification related respectively to higher and lower standards of education, training and experience and, if so, what arrangements there should be to enable those qualified in the lower level to proceed to the higher level;

(iv) whether a single professional designation could be adopted, having regard to the fact that training would be in public practice, industry, commerce or public service.

It was announced that proposals on the above matters had been outlined, but that the whole subject needed more extensive study before it was clear whether any acceptable scheme could be prepared for the consideration of members generally: the councils of the participating bodies hoped to be able to make a further statement in the autumn.

Members were notified in October that a Joint Steering Committee, consisting of representatives of the six accountancy bodies, had met for the first time in April 1966: it had appointed six working parties to examine various aspects of the problem and these had made considerable progress in formulating proposals for the future development of the profession.

It was pointed out, however, that the views of Government departments must be obtained on certain questions which vitally affected the future of the profession: these views were not yet available and, in consequence, the Council was not yet able to submit the proposed statement.

The six working parties established by the Joint Steering Committee were concerned with: overseas matters, practice rights, entry standards, education, examinations, experience and training, other accountancy bodies, constitutional matters, administrative matters.

Early in 1967, the Board of Trade referred to the Monopolies Commission practices in the professions which might be considered restrictive and it became evident that certain legislative support for which the accountancy bodies had asked would not be available, at least in the immediate future. In a letter dated March 14th, 1967, members were informed that the implications of the latest developments were being considered and that it was hoped to make a further announcement in the summer.

Secretariat and administration

With the substantial increase in student registrations and in the number of students taking the Institute's examinations, and with the planned expansion in other fields there has been an increasing load on the administration.

New equipment for faster and better reproduction of documents has been installed.

The increase in technical activity made it necessary to enlarge the staff of the technical department, Mr R. W. Duffield, F.C.W.A., was appointed in May to the post of Senior Technical Officer of the Institute. Mr A. H. Fleet, F.C.W.A., continues as Technical Officer with special responsibility for electronic data processing and associated subjects.

Mr D. C. Wildish, T.D., A.M.B.I.M., A.I.W.S.P., M.I.O.M., was appointed in November to take over the duties of Administrative Officer from Mr W. J. G. Acton, who resigned at the end of the year in order to take up another appointment.

Eighty-first Annual Report

The report of the Board of Governors for the year to February 28th, 1967, to be presented at the eighty-first annual general meeting of the Association at Church House, Westminster, London SW1, on May 10th.

THE Association, on February 28th, 1967, consisted of 5,206 members, viz.:

The President	1,655 Annual Governors
192 Vice-Presidents	228 Life Members
21 Life Governors	3,109 Annual Members being an increase of 4 during the year.

2. During the year assistance has been given from the General Fund in 121 cases (146 in 1965-66). There were 14 new cases (19) and 5 (10) former beneficiaries were assisted again. At the end of the year there were 106 (109) current cases. Assistance from the Special Fund was given in 5 cases (5). The Executive Committee refused assistance in a number of cases and the Secretary also dealt with many other inquiries which did not come before the Committee; in some cases he was able to give assistance of other than a financial nature.

3. Details are shown on pages 29 to 38<sup>1</sup> of all the cases in which assistance has been given during the year. These pages show the wide variety of circumstances which have led to help being given by the Association both to the old and to the young. The number of children under 21 mentioned in these pages is 66; there are also 14 between 21 and 24, many of whom are not yet fully independent. In a number of cases the grant is shown to be £52 per annum or less; this usually represents the maximum grant which is permitted by the Ministry of Social Security (formerly the National Assistance Board). In almost every such case our grant is supplemented by one or more donations for specific purposes, such as a holiday or the hire of a television set, which are permitted by the Ministry.

4. The fall in the number of cases in which assistance was given during the year has been more than balanced by the unusual complexity of many of the cases and by the very considerable correspondence which was brought about by the introduction of rate rebates under the Rating Act 1966 and by the increase in benefits which came into force in November 1966 following the transfer of the main functions of the National Assistance Board to the new Ministry of Social Security. National assistance is now known either as supplementary pension in the case of those of retiring age or as supplementary allowance in other cases; it is, however, convenient for some purposes to continue to use the generic term. Every national assistance case has been fully examined to ensure that maximum State relief is being obtained together with the maximum additional benefits which can be given by a charity within the limits set by the Ministry.

5. The accounts for the year ended February 28th, 1967, duly audited, are annexed to this report<sup>1</sup>.

6. The total expended by the Association in relief since its formation in 1886 amounts to £450,482. The principal figures from the accounts for the last five years are:

Year	Relief	Subscriptions	Investment Income
1962-63 .. ..	23,841	12,884	11,727
1963-64 .. ..	23,965	14,271	14,869
1964-65 .. ..	24,999	14,217	22,151
1965-66 .. ..	25,863	14,688	25,253
1966-67 .. ..	26,478	14,659	26,094

7. Although it was less than two years ago that the Board decided to increase the basis on which assistance is given, the recent increase in national assistance grants has indicated the need to examine, and to increase, our basis once again so that our beneficiaries can be given a reasonable standard of living.

8. Christmas food hampers have, as usual, been sent to the great majority of our beneficiaries. The letters received show how very much these hampers are appreciated.

9. During the year the Association has received the following bequests and donations:

Bequests:	£
The Seear Bequest .. ..	23,952
H. C. Merrett, F.C.A. (additional) .. ..	13,397
William T. Bell, F.C.A. .. ..	500

10. The largest single benefaction received during the year has been the Secar Bequest, amounting to £23,952. Mr John Secar, A.C.A., a founder member of the Institute who died in 1912, left the Association one-half of the residue of his estate subject to life interests. The bequest was on terms close to, but not identical with, the objects of the Association and the Public Trustee as executor agreed to exercise a power under the will to vary the terms of the bequest so that it might be merged with the general funds of the Association. In exercising this power he imposed a condition, which the Executive Committee readily accepted, that the gift should be commemorated in the list of major benefactions published in each annual report.

11. During the year the Association was approached by the trustees of the Merrett Estate and asked to consider the possibility of buying Home Farm, Easthampstead, from the Merrett Estate. It was explained that the trustees wished to sell the farm and reinvest the proceeds in order to improve the income available to the life-tenant. As remainder-man of the Merrett Estate the Association would have received the farm on the death of the life-tenant if it had not been sold in the meantime either to Bracknell Development Corporation or in the open market and, after receiving a favourable report from a special subcommittee appointed to consider the matter in detail, the Executive Committee agreed to buy the farm at a price confirmed by professional advisers to be a fair market price. Home Farm lies on the outskirts of Bracknell New Town and comprises a farmhouse with extensive outbuildings standing on 178 acres of land, together with three cottages. Originally there were 355 acres, 177 of which were sold to Bracknell Development Corporation by the Merrett Estate trustees in 1963. The farm was purchased with vacant possession at Michaelmas 1966 and has since been relet. Prior to the purchase of the farm from the Merrett Estate, the Association had an absolute interest of one-quarter in the trust owning the farm and, after the farm had changed hands, the Merrett Estate trustees were able to pay out the Association's absolute interest, the amount distributed to the Association being applied towards the purchase of the farm.

12. A very large part of the Association's income is derived from its investments and the Board is grateful to the many benefactors whose bequests and gifts have helped to build up the capital of the Association. It is not practicable for reasons of space to commemorate these benefactions in detail in the annual accounts and the Board therefore publishes a list of major benefactions not otherwise mentioned individually in the annual accounts. The list on page 27<sup>2</sup> includes only individual benefactions of £2,500 or more.

13. During the year no grants have been made from the W. B. Peat Memorial Scholarship Fund. It is expected that some new grants will commence during the current year.

14. The general review of the rules and regulations of the Association, a matter mentioned in the last annual report, has now been carried out and a special general meeting is to be called, to follow the annual general meeting which will be held on May 10th, 1967, to consider the approval of the new rules. A copy of the proposed new rules will be sent to all members of the Association under separate cover. Reference is made below<sup>3</sup> to certain alterations in the rates of annual subscription and the new rules also provide for the appointment of a management committee in place of the Board of Governors and the Executive Committee. Provision is also made for a life member of the former Incorporated Accountants' Benevolent Fund to become a life member of the Association; any such person is asked to make an application. Other changes are set out in the notes which form part of the document in which the proposed new rules are set out.

15. The Association has continued to take an active interest in the affairs of Crossways Trust of which it is a founder member. The Secretary of the Association is a member of the Board of Governors and also of the Finance and General Purposes Committee of the Trust. During the year the Association has been able to acquire a further three places in the homes of the Trust. During the year four additional beneficiaries entered the homes; other beneficiaries who were in the homes, have however, died and there are at present vacancies which can be filled by the Association. The Secretary would be glad to hear of any member, member and wife, or widow of a member who would like to be considered for these places.

16. The Board has very recently come to an agreement with the Hanover Housing Association under which the Association can acquire nomination rights to housing units (mostly flats or bungalows) in the housing schemes of that Association. It is hoped that this may prove to be a valuable service provided by the Benevolent Association.

17. There has been no change in the membership of the Executive Committee during the year.

18. It is the policy of the Board to ensure that as far as possible a member of the Institute living near a beneficiary, or applicant for relief, acts as a referee and is available to give advice when required. Such assistance from members is of the greatest value to the Executive Committee in considering applications. The Board wishes to thank district societies, branches and groups, for their help in appointing members for this purpose and also to thank those appointed for the considerable time and trouble they have taken in helping beneficiaries.

19. The Board wishes to record its warm appreciation to Mr R. W. L. Eke, Mr G. L. C. Touche and Mr D. A. Clarke as members of the Investment Subcommittee of the Executive Committee of the Association.

20. The Board is grateful to Messrs Markbys, the honorary solicitors, for their services.

21. The Accountants' Christian Fellowship has continued to help to find employment for members who are unemployed as the result of protracted illness or other misfortune. This form of assistance is considered to be of the greatest importance and is very much appreciated.

22. The Board thanks the editors of Accountancy and The Accountant for the publicity they have given to the affairs of the Association during the year. Brief reports of the quarterly meetings of the Executive Committee have been published in both journals. The Board very much appreciated the coloured photographs of Ridgemoor House, one of the homes of Crossways Trust, which appeared, together with an article by one of the residents, in the January 1967 issue of Accountancy.

23. The Board wishes to place on record its high appreciation of the work of the officers and staff of the Association and of the Institute.

24. The auditors, Mr Bernard William Rivett, F.C.A., and Mr James Mansfield Keith, F.C.A., retire as auditors and offer themselves for reappointment.

NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ACCOUNTANTS

Deferment of the closing date for registration for the Congress to May 15th has previously been announced in these columns. We now understand that the booking list for the ballet on Thursday, September 8th, is now closed; there are still places, however, for the gala concert and the theatre that evening.

The two-day excursion to the Cote d'Azur is also over-subscribed, though places remain for the two-day trip to the Chateaux de la Loire and the one-day excursions on Saturday and Sunday.

Also fully booked are the dinner-concerts on board bateaux-mouche on Monday, September 11th, but an additional feature for those interested is a dinner-dance in the Eiffel Tower Restaurant on the same evening at the same price (i.e. 90 f).

SOUTH EASTERN SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Election of President

At the annual general meeting of the South Eastern Society of Chartered Accountants held on April 24th in Brighton, Mr David H. Tonkinson, F.C.A., a partner in the firm of Thornton Baker & Co, Chartered Accountants, of Worthing, was installed as President of the Society for 1967-68. Mr Tonkinson has already represented the Society as President since September last year following the death of Mr F. Clifford Davey, F.C.A., during his term of office.

Mr Tonkinson, who is aged 40 was born in Hove where he still resides. He was admitted to membership of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in 1951.

In the following year he commenced in practice in Brighton on his own account under the style of D. H. Tonkinson & Co. The practice amalgamated with that of Edmonds & Co, Chartered Accountants, of Portsmouth, in 1954, when he became partner in charge of the combined firms' Worthing office. Later, in 1961, Edmonds & Co amalgamated with his present firm and Mr Tonkinson remained as resident partner in the Worthing office.

A founder member and Past Chairman of the Worthing and District Local Members' Group of the South Eastern Society, Mr Tonkinson served as assistant secretary of the Society from 1953-55 and secretary from 1955-59. In addition to his activities in the senior Society he served as secretary from 1952-53 of the Kent and Sussex Chartered Accountants Students' Society.

Mr Tonkinson has attended a number of the Institute's Summer Courses at Oxford and Cambridge and was a group leader at last year's Oxford Summer Course.

The new Vice-President of the Society is Mr W. R. McBrien, F.C.A., a partner in the firm of Gibbons & Mitchell, Chartered Accountants, of Hastings. Mr T. T. Nash, F.C.A., of 33 Lawrence Road, Hove, continues as honorary secretary of the Society.

Annual Report

The annual report for 1966 presented at the meeting, records a total membership of the Society at December 31st last, of 1,088.

Six meetings were held during the year on topics of professional interest and the Society's six local members' groups at Brighton, Canterbury, Guildford, Hastings, Maidstone and Worthing all held a number of meetings. Although the Society did not arrange a residential conference for its members in 1966, two conferences are to take place this year at the University of Sussex and the University of Kent - both in September.

A successful students' residential course was again held in Brighton during September and was attended by 150 students.

CHIEF ACCOUNTING OFFICER FOR EVERY COMPANY?

Speaking on 'Some new thoughts on financial control in manufacturing industries' to members of the Institute of Management Consultants in London on April 26th, Mr Lawrence W. Robson, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., a member of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, suggested there might be a case for introducing into the next Companies Act a requirement that a chief accounting officer be appointed with responsibility for the standards of financial operation and reporting within each company, and to its shareholders.

Mr Robson felt that this suggestion would encompass twin aims: it would improve directors' accountability to shareholders for their management competence, and would improve the general level of directors' management accounting practices in respect of budgeting as already practised by more efficient companies. He added that 'all too unhappily in the general sense there are many well-defined concepts of control which appear to be totally unknown in many quarters where one would expect enlightenment'.

Referring to capital investment appraisal, Mr Robson said that the need for appraisal for disinvestment in relation to existing company activities often received too little attention, too late.

SOUTH-EAST ESSEX BRANCH OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Following the announcement in these columns on April 15th that the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales had authorized the formation of a South-East Essex Branch of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants, the inaugural meeting of the new branch was held at Shenfield on April 24th. The meeting was attended by the Deputy President of the Institute, Mr W. E. Parker, C.B.E., F.C.A.; the Chairman of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants, Mr Brian A. Maynard, M.A., F.C.A., and other representatives of the Council of the Institute and of the Committee of the London and District Society.

The formation of the branch was brought about by talks between the three groups in South Essex, namely, Southend-on-Sea, South-west Essex and Mid Essex. As senior representative of the participating groups, Mr

E. H. R. Martin, F.C.A., of Southend-on-Sea, chaired the meeting and spoke briefly of the talks which had led up to the inauguration. The meeting formally adopted rules and elected a committee. Mr S. L. Elkington, F.C.A., was appointed auditor.

Mr Parker said that the development of branches was welcomed by the Institute and the London and District Society because it was becoming more and more difficult to run the business of the Institute from a large centre and it was therefore essential that the ever increasing burden of work in assisting members be delegated to branches and other organizations within the Institute's framework. The formation of a branch was one of the means in assisting members to do their jobs better and it encouraged contact between them. In particular he felt that co-operation between members of the Society outside the City of London was not as great as it could be and there was therefore a need for a development along these lines. As an Essex man he was personally pleased to see the formation of the new branch.

Mr Maynard said that the committee of the London and District Society was pleased to see the formation take place and was happy that it had not needed too much encouragement - in fact, it would have been difficult to stop this natural development. It was hoped that the branch would bring about a better relationship with the centre and that the demands on the centre would increase with regard to speakers and the promotion of courses for members.

Mr H. Gordon Smith, F.C.A., a member of the Council of the Institute and a past Chairman of the London and District Society, proposed a vote of thanks to Mr E. H. R. Martin, F.C.A., and members who had worked so hard in bringing about the formation of the branch. On behalf of the East Anglian Society of Chartered Accountants, the President, Mr R. H. Taylor, F.C.A., wished the branch all success and looked forward to its happy relationship with his own Society.

was made to Mr Spalding who in turn presented an Institute plaque to Mr B. J. Laming, A.C.W.A., Secretary of the Enfield Sub-Branch.

THE ACCOUNTANCY PROFESSION IN THE U.K.

German and Spanish translations of The Accountancy Profession in the United Kingdom: Its Development, Structure, Nature and Scope—the booklet produced by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales (the English and French versions of which were referred to under 'Current Affairs' in The Accountant of December 24th last), have now been published. The booklets are being distributed through professional organizations abroad—including the Spanish-speaking countries of America—as well as through Board of Trade and other channels and British firms with overseas offices and associate firms.

CREDIT MANAGEMENT SEMINAR

A two-day seminar for those in executive positions in industry responsible for the control of credit to trade customers is to be held at the University of Aston, Gosta Green, Birmingham 4, from May 11th to 12th.

Organized by the City of Birmingham College of Commerce, the seminar will set out to show the full scope of services available to the credit controller and to suggest ways in which the exercise of credit control can be used as an aid to management. A major feature of the seminar will be a series of simulated problems for participants with decisions to be reached in complex circumstances.

Further particulars of the seminar are available from Mr R. H. Grimsley, Lecturer to the School of Business Administration, City of Birmingham College of Commerce, Aston Street, Birmingham 4.

INTERNATIONAL FISCAL ASSOCIATION

The annual dinner of the British Branch of I.F.A. was held on Friday, April 28th, in the Abingdon Restaurant, Church House, Westminster. The Branch Chairman, Mr Alun G. Davies, commented on the satisfactory increase in branch membership and especially on the large number of members and guests attending the dinner. Mr Davies referred to the early years when the Branch was first formed and to the sterling work at that rather difficult time of his predecessor, Mr Charles Aston, F.C.A. A presentation was then made to Mr Aston who suitably replied. Professor Anthony Merrett of the Finance Department, London Graduate Business School, was the guest speaker at a most enjoyable evening.

Family income problems come in different sizes too

It's fun growing up but young Timothy does have a bit of a grumble—he says father is a bit stingy with the pocket money. Perhaps he is—particularly when the bills come rolling in—which seems to be most of the time anyway.

There is one bill father pays which is surprisingly small but if he dies it could mean so much to the family—it's his premium to provide an income of £1,000 a year while the children are growing up.

He hopes and expects that his own coat peg will be in use for a long time but he arranged the policy with Legal and General just in case. Legal and General have an imaginative way of handling income benefits. Send this coupon for further details.

AN IMPORTANT NEW BOOK
FOR MANAGEMENT — JUST PUBLISHED

PLANNING FOR PROFITS

by DOUGLAS GARBUTT, A.C.I.S., A.C.W.A.

ANOTHER BOOK
IN THE GEE'S
WORLD MANAGEMENT
SERIES

This book presents an unusual combination of sound theory and practical common sense. For every business man, but especially the manager in the smaller firm, it outlines a simple system which can give effective profit planning. With this system, a manager can fix fair and accurate prices, and can decide which orders offer him most profit and which least. Costs can be established and comparisons made which will spotlight inefficiencies. Development of effective, logical and acceptable cost standards can be made to which all members of the firm can conform.

Direct costing overcomes many of the drawbacks of conventional costing systems and the author advocates a system of simple charts which offer a flexible basis for profit-planning.

The author has a remarkable combination of qualifications for writing this book: It is based on first-hand consultancy work which he undertook by virtue of his qualifications as a Cost Accountant and Chartered Secretary.

He is, however, also a lecturer with many years of full- and part-time teaching experience. He has been Acting Technical Officer for the Institute of Cost and Works Accountants and is well known for the many articles which he has contributed to the technical press. Finally, he is a qualified teacher and holds an Academic Diploma in Education.

This book is recommended for the benefit of the business man and manager who is concerned with establishing and maintaining profit objectives for his business. It should also appeal to students who wish to understand the techniques of planning for profits and who are interested in how they can be applied in practice.

Management Accounting Adviser for Unilever

UNILEVER needs a qualified accountant to fill a post in ORGANISATION DIVISION – a London based unit providing internal management consultancy services to operating companies in the U.K. and overseas.

The adviser's responsibilities include the establishment of continuing personal links with a number of operating companies; advice and assistance with problem solving; development of profit planning procedures; design of management information systems, including use of computer applications; improvements in cost control methods, and participation in cost reduction programmes.

The requirements of this important post call for a man with wide experience of management accounting advisory work – obtained either in a professional consultancy firm or in another large industrial enterprise. Preferred age 30–40 years.

There will be opportunities for close liaison with the Computer and Operations Research sections of the Division and participation in joint approaches to major assignments.

Entry into Organisation Division provides one of the few ways of joining Unilever in mid-career, and as the record increasingly shows, opportunities are likely to occur within a relatively short time for transfer to senior posts in operating units.

The candidate's present remuneration will be taken into account in agreeing a suitable starting salary. Subsequent increments will allow for continuous progress within a salary scale similar to that applicable to external consulting firms.

Those interested should write or telephone with brief particulars to H. E. Betham, Unilever Ltd, Salisbury Square House, Salisbury Square, London EC4. (Tel. City 2050, Ext. 325.)

Accountant / Systems Analyst

An Accountant/Systems Analyst is required for the Management Services Department of The Metal Box Company Limited. He will be based in London, but will be assigned to work as an adviser to a Product Group. In his approach to problems, he will have the support of Management Services colleagues in other disciplines such as O.R., O. & M., Work Study, etc. The Systems Analyst will have an opportunity, through this inter-disciplinary collaboration, of developing into a 'generalist' able to undertake Management Services assignments of even broader scope. Applicants who should be qualified and aged between 25 and 35, with experience of either (a) Systems Analysis or (b) Standard Cost Systems or (c) Installing Accounting Systems, should write with relevant details to:

Staff Division

The Metal Box Company Limited
P.O. Box 1 AN, 37 Baker Street, London W1

quoting reference PRX/13.

Salaries, terms and conditions available on joining, will be discussed with selected candidates at interviews.

Chief Internal Auditor

EAGLE STAR INSURANCE CO. LTD. requires a qualified accountant with good audit experience to take charge of its internal audit department in Cheltenham. The man appointed will be directly responsible to an assistant general manager of the company. The post, which is progressive, offers considerable scope for initiative. A starting salary of up to £2,500 per annum according to qualifications and experience is contemplated and there are valuable fringe benefits in the form of pension schemes and house purchase arrangements.

The company has installed a large electronic computer and has extensive plans for the transfer of its principal accounting and clerical functions to this machine. The man appointed will be responsible for the development and application of new internal audit programmes suitable for use with the new EDP procedures.

Candidates should be qualified accountants aged between 28 and 35 and should have at least three years' audit experience since qualifying. Previous experience of the audit of an insurance company and of the application of modern auditing techniques to EDP systems would be an advantage but is not essential provided the candidate has good general audit experience and can display initiative.

Please write, in confidence, giving particulars of age, qualifications, experience and posts held to Price Waterhouse & Co., 3 Frederick's Place, Old Jewry, London, E.C.2 quoting reference MCS/1077.

Management Accounting

Promotion has given rise to 3 vacancies

One post involves the extension of U.K. investment studies and product profitability accounts into Group operations overseas. This will probably be filled by a newly qualified Chartered Accountant.

Two more posts in the Management Accounting Team involve taking part in profit planning, budgetary control and the interpretation of data for Senior Management. They will appeal to A.C.W.A., A.C.A., or A.A.C.C.A., men in their 20's, who want to apply their professional knowledge in creative partnership with graduate commercial and scientific colleagues.

Starting salaries within the bracket £1,300 to £2,000; thereafter Company salary policy is designed to cater for rapid personal development.

Please write, quoting J.73, giving age and full details of education and experience to E. I. Elliott, Personnel Manager, Ilford Limited, Ilford, Essex.

PROFESSIONAL

When you read this, Finals will be over and many of you will be thinking about the next move. One of the more logical steps is to join a large practice. If, of course, you're already with one the next position might take some thinking about. Well, that's what we're here for: to give you food for thought. Come in and have a talk with any or all of our consultants.

P.A. TO MANAGER - Qualified for large WC2 practice. Very interesting non-routine group of audits. Young with initiative and ambition. Salary circa £1,900 p.a.

BRIGHTON - TAXATION SENIOR - Medium-sized firm requires experienced type with better-than-average knowledge of company taxation including recent developments. Not necessarily qualified, to start at around £1,700 p.a.

POTENTIAL PARTNERSHIPS - SOUTH COAST - Two brilliant opportunities offered to young A.C.A.s wishing to settle in congenial surroundings. Both with rapidly expanding practices requiring vigorous partners. Terms to be discussed at substantial level.

YOUNG UNQUALIFIED SENIOR - Excellent training for, say, student A.C.C.A. offered by medium City practice. Will get supervisory experience and opportunity to see all facets of professional practice. Commencing salary circa £1,250 p.a.

These are only a fleecite out of 207 current Professional vacancies in U.K.

Man to see: Graham J. Elmslie.

POST OF THE WEEK

If you've ever felt the call of Gaul or the lure of any other of 'them furrin parts' across the Channel and have ever responded eagerly enough to have worked there, this may well be the job for you.

The international division of United States manufacturers of chemical plant lacks a CONTROLLER. If you are going to fill this gap (caused by promotion) all of the following requirements will have to be met:

A professional qualification (A.C.A./A.A.C.C.A./A.C.W.A.), recent experience on the Continent in commerce/industry/profession and an age of below 33. Language(s) desirable, as are evidences of considerable drive, initiative and previous success. It is emphasised that mundane attitudes will not be amenable to the demands of this position.

The divisional H.Q. is at the moment in London W1, but will shortly be moving to mid-Surrey. Dependent upon ability, the salary could well be £3,000 p.a.

Man to see: David J. Wilkinson.

TASK FORCE

We wish to recruit our own staff semi-seniors for temporary work. Age is immaterial but successful applicants will have above average personalities and ability.

Man to see: Brian W. Danca.

APPOINTMENTS CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Turquand, Youngs & Co, have vacancies in London for qualified accountants who are seeking to broaden their experience.

Staff have ample opportunities to increase their knowledge of advanced techniques whilst engaged on work in a wide variety of industrial and commercial companies. The firm runs its own courses, including instruction in Electronic Data Processing.

There are excellent prospects for promotion and first-class experience can be obtained by those who wish to spend a further two or three years on the practising side before deciding on their future.

Good salaries are paid depending on experience and ability.

Please address applications to Staff Partner, 4 Coleman Street, London EC2.

QUALIFIED ACCOUNTANTS

Thomson McLintock & Co have vacancies in London, Midlands, Yorkshire, Northern and South Wales offices for recently qualified accountants seeking to broaden their experience in an interesting and varied practice.

Initial appointment would be to the audit staff; there are also opportunities for investigation and other special work. Instruction in data processing techniques and openings for specialization in management accounting and taxation are available after experience for selected candidates.

Starting salaries depend on age and experience and an above-average rate would be paid to suitable applicants willing to enter a three-year agreement. Prospects for promotion within the firm are excellent. There is a contributory pension scheme and an annual entitlement to four weeks' holiday and an additional two days' leave.

Applications should be addressed to the Staff Partner, 33 King William Street, London EC4.

FOR YOUNG ACCOUNTANTS SEEKING ADVANCEMENT

Cooper Brothers & Co invite applications from young qualified accountants and May finalists for appointments in their offices in London, the Midlands, the North and West Country.

The positions offer opportunities to obtain experience of modern techniques applied to a wide range of professional work including computer auditing. Initially the work will be concerned with auditing, accountancy and taxation but as experience is gained there will be opportunities to take part in investigations or to transfer to one of the specialist departments.

The firm provides formal training under the direction of a full-time training officer.

There will be opportunities to travel abroad on short- or long-term assignments.

Applications should be addressed to the Staff Partner, 33 Gutter Lane, London EC2, and should indicate the part of the country in which the applicant would like to work.

Taxation

Deloitte, Plender, Griffiths & Co. invite applications from recently qualified accountants who wish to specialise in taxation. The range of work in the Taxation Department is interesting and varied and covers all aspects of United Kingdom taxation. Starting salaries are attractive and subject to regular review.

THE CITY OF WESTMINSTER ASSURANCE SOCIETY

Fourth Annual Report

CONTINUED PROGRESS AND CONTROLLED EXPANSION

The Society's third full year of operations which ended on December 31st, 1966, proved to be one of good progress.

At the end of 1966 Members' Funds amounted to £832,560, and by April 1st, 1967 this figure had increased to over £1½ million.

Excellent support for the Property Unit Fund

The Property Unit Fund was introduced in August 1966, and it received excellent support – initially from existing members of the Society, and subsequently from the public. Judging by the extent of subscriptions to the Fund it certainly appears that the Society's enthusiasm for commercial and industrial property as a stable and profitable investment is shared by a large section of the public.

I would point out at this juncture the considerable amount of work that is involved in selecting and negotiating the purchase of properties. For each one purchased, some dozen properties may be examined and rejected. The time lapse between the decision to buy and the completion of the acquisition may be as long as three or four months; for this reason funds not immediately required are placed on short-call deposit with various Local Authorities.

The Society's overall ratio of expenses to premiums received on all types of business during the year was 6.65%, which is low by any standards. By far the larger part of the expenses was incurred by Press advertising and the payment of commission to Insurance Brokers, Stockbrokers, Banks, etc. in respect of business introduced.

Effects of The Budget

During the year we saw the intrusion of Commercial companies into the Friendly Societies' movement, and it was no surprise that this caused the Chancellor, in his 1966 Budget, to clamp down on the tax concessions which had long been enjoyed by Friendly Societies. The 'inefficiency and high expenses' of existing Friendly Societies was quoted in the Press as the justification of this commercialisation of the movement; it is interesting in this connection to note that our main 'commercial' competitor was making an average initial Management charge of 8½% on its Unit business, whilst ours was 3½%. In the fifteen months period (to April 1st, 1967), since this particular 'commercialised' Society's entry into the field, the value of their 'Unit' has increased by less than 5%, whilst in the same period our comparable 'First Units' have increased by over 12½% in value.

One favourable result of the Finance Act 1966, was the extension of the Society's limits to £2,000 sum assured in respect of each member. As far as I am aware the Society was the first to take advantage of this extension with its Property Bonds and the Property Investment Policy.

The Society's small staff has coped with the quite considerable administrative work extremely well and I would like to express my thanks to them.

Accountancy – August 1966

This book seems likely to be a best seller in accounting circles for many years to come. Here we have for the first time a leading firm publishing with a few changes (and those only to make it more suitable for general use) the office manual on auditing which it has developed over a long period of years and which is in daily use by its partners and audit staff... This is a practical work, not a theoretical textbook.

Certified Accountants Journal – November 1966 – AUDITING PROCEDURES

This is an outstanding work which should be well received by all those engaged in auditing... This book is one that can be recommended to all members of the auditing profession and one which, if the techniques, procedures and principles contained therein were adopted, could radically affect the whole concept of auditing, changing it from an art into a science. No auditor, therefore, of any size company can fail to agree that it is desirable to follow the text of this Manual wherever possible. Students will find it excellent as additional reading material.

cover and bonuses based on equity investment

now you can recommend a policy backed by the proven record of an established equity portfolio

The W. & G.'s new Equity Policy enables your clients to take advantage of the past performance of the Society's equity portfolio, started in 1954. The table on the right shows the course of the portfolio from inception—and this record is your clients most reliable guide to future prospects. All premiums paid under the policy, and interest earned, are invested solely in the equity portfolio—and, of course, as the law stands, profits are not liable to capital gains tax. At the same time, the life cover given by the policy is absolutely guaranteed, as too are all declared bonuses: so there can be no loss of capital. Two further points of particular interest: control of the complete operation is in the hands of a single, unified management—and the premiums can be paid by monthly Banker's Order, at no extra cost. Looked at either as a method of investing in equities, with lower tax liability and the additional benefit of life cover, or as a means of securing essential life cover with higher than normal bonuses, this policy is bound to prove of considerable interest to your clients. Make sure you have the full facts—contained in our new leaflet—at your fingertips: write now for your copy. Commission of 30/- per £100 sum assured will be paid to accountants, when the first year premium has been received, to cover all costs incurred by them.

The company, who have always been in the lead with the provision of oral tuition in accordance with the changing pattern of examination preparation, have now decided to hold one-week classes by way of introduction to the Part I Final examination of the Institute.

The first of these will be held during the week June 19th to 23rd, i.e. shortly after the announcement of the Intermediate examination results. The emphasis will be on new subjects that students have not met in their Intermediate studies, and in particular on Taxation and Executorship. This should considerably ease the path of students tackling these and other new subjects for the first time. The fee is 12 guineas for a one-week full-time course. Accommodation will be limited, and those wishing to enrol provisionally, while awaiting their Intermediate examination result, may do so on payment of a deposit of £3 3s which will be refunded in the event of cancellation owing to failure in the Intermediate examination.

Decline of smaller Companies

THE small company is a diminishing quantity in U.K. industry states an article in the current Westminster Bank Review. The author, Mr MARTIN RUDD, formerly with the N.E.D.C., estimates that some 7,000 manufacturing establishments with between 11 and 25 employees, to use the Census of Production classifications, probably disappeared between 1953 and 1961. The decline in their numbers, he contends, is continuing. By mid-1961 such small establishments represented 22·8 per cent of all manufacturing establishments, whereas in January 1953 the corresponding figure was 30·5 per cent. The reduction in the number of these small establishments led to a corresponding decline in the total employees employed by small companies from 294,000 to 222,000 – a relative fall from 4·1 per cent to 2·7 per cent of the total labour force in manufacturing industry. A number of proposals are put forward whereby the fortunes of the smaller business might be restored and the independence of the small man retained. In particular, Mr RUDD suggests that it might be possible for him to give up some fraction of his independence by forging links with a financial group specializing in his field, or possibly with suppliers of raw materials or retail customers. Alternatively, he suggests it might be possible for small companies to set up co-operative buying and marketing organizations.

Mr RUDD views favourably the number of service organizations available to business men in the United States compared with the United Kingdom, whereby subcontracting and franchising becomes possible. He argues that the trades associations in Britain should be encouraged to take a wider view of their functions and provide marketing, technical and other information for their members, as well as work study, investment appraisal, and computerized analysis of costing and statistical data.

Finance remains, on the whole, a problem for the small business. Mr Rudd comments favourably on the recent Parliamentary debate in which a member advocated the creation of a 'Small Business Bureau' and 'Small Business Loan Fund' which would fill this gap. It is not, as the author points out, merely a question of finding where to obtain finance, but also of how the case for financial assistance can best be presented.

The various Government departments have done a good deal in recent years to provide aid to industry through information services and further education and training. Mr RUDD feels that this intervention should be extended to facilities which would be of special interest to small companies.

Land Commission As 'Middleman'

AT a general meeting of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors on Thursday of last week, Sir HENRY WELLS, Chairman of the Land Commission, presented a paper (reproduced in full on other pages) which gave some useful and interesting information as to the Commission's views on policy. He said the Commission regarded Part II of the Land Commission Act 1967 which relates to the acquisition, management and disposal of land, as being more important than Part III which deals with the charge and assessment of betterment levy.

It was estimated that there were from 1-1½ million transactions in land each year, only 100,000 to 150,000 of which would give rise to an assessment to levy. In connection with such transactions it was hoped that valuers would give their clients some indication whether levy would be payable, and if so, the probable amount. But until some months had elapsed after a 'chargeable act or event' there could be no certainty about the amount of levy. Even 'nil' notices of assessment would have to reserve the right to reconsider the position if the Commission had been misinformed or had not been given all the relevant facts.

There was, however, observed Sir HENRY, a way in which the Commission could help. If, for instance, X agreed to sell his large freehold Victorian house standing in three acres of land to Y for £30,000, X would not know at the time of signing the contract of sale what levy he would be asked to pay under Case A following the conveyance on sale. This uncertainty could be removed by X and Y asking the Commission, through the Regional Office of the Commission, to buy X's property for £30,000, less a negotiated and agreed amount of betterment levy, and resell it to Y at the figure of £30,000. If the Commission agreed, they could at the same time also agree under section 60 of the Act, that if Y started his development within two years he would not be assessed under Case C in respect of that development. The Commission might also be prepared to hold the land until Y was ready to start development, but in that event interest would be charged until the land was conveyed to Y.

Sir HENRY referred to this kind of operation as the 'middleman method' which he said was not likely to be more expensive in fees. In order to come in as middleman the Commission would acquire the land by a 'general vesting declaration' under section 9, following a voluntarily accepted compulsory purchase order, and resell to the developer. This would not invalidate the vendor's right to deduct valuer's fees from market value in reaching a settlement of the betterment levy. The Commission did not pay stamp duty and, as the developer would receive from the Commission a vested title, the legal work would be small compared with a normal conveyance transaction. The Commission would, of course, have to clear the vendor's title but this need not hold up the sale to the developer.

There is every reason why the Commission should be a willing party to the middleman method in appropriate cases. Under section 2 of the Act there is to be established under the control of the Commission a 'Land Acquisition and Management Fund', called by Sir HENRY the 'Land Trading Fund', into which has to be paid by the Commission 'all sums received by them in consideration of any disposition of an interest in land'. Thus, if the Commission buys X's land, less betterment levy which in effect X pays, and sells the land to Y at a price which includes the betterment levy, the Commission puts the levy in its own pocket whereas, if X sold the land direct to Y, the levy would have to be paid into the Exchequer.

Sir HENRY said the Commission believed the only effective way to reduce the price of building land was to increase the supply of it, and it intended to administer Part II of the Act in such a way that large and small developers were adequately supplied with land in units of such size and so situated in relation to industry and services that development would be more economical than in the past. But until the Commission had built up its 'fund' it would have to husband its resources carefully and operate on a basis of priorities.

The 'fund' starts with a loan of £45 million from the Treasury which is repayable, so that the Commission will generally need to make a profit. Further, Sir HENRY said it would be necessary to trade at a loss in some 'twilight areas', where the cost of acquiring land was greater than the value of the land which would be realized as the result of a planned development.

Unless so directed by the appropriate Minister or in the case of crownhold dispositions, the Commission may not sell, lease or otherwise dispose of land except for the best consideration obtainable; so that when it comes to sell land purchased in advance of requirements it is hardly likely that the Commission will fill the role of fairy godmother to the developer. In the case of the middleman method, however, the main bargaining parties would seem to be the vendor and the developer, with the Commission chiefly interested in the levy, though this could well influence the final selling price. No doubt more information will be forthcoming in due course. Meanwhile the 'middleman method' looks interesting.

FINANCE BILL

Intra-group Transfers

WHEN the CHIEF SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY proposed the second reading of the current Finance Bill last week, he referred to representations to the Government that the existing charge of Schedule F tax on transfers of assets at less than market value by a subsidiary company to its parent could be an undesirable obstacle to company reconstructions. It might also be added that such a charge is somewhat pointless. It is contained in the Finance Act 1965, in Schedule 11 where 'distribution' is defined. The particular provision is paragraph 1 (2) which reads:

'Where on a transfer of assets or liabilities by a company to its members or to a company by its members, the amount or value of the benefit received by a member (taken according to its market value) exceeds the amount or value (so taken) of any new consideration given by him, the company shall be treated as making a distribution to him of an amount equal to the difference.'

The paragraph does not say what is meant by 'member'. The Inland Revenue explanatory booklet, referring to paragraph 1 (2), speaks of 'shareholder' rather than 'member'. Clearly it would not include a debentureholder or an employee as such.

The phrase 'new consideration' is defined in paragraph 4 as meaning consideration not provided directly or indirectly out of the assets of the company (in particular, amounts retained by the company by way of capitalization). Strictly speaking it would seem that if the company paid a large dividend (which was admittedly a distribution and paid tax accordingly) and at the same time invited the members to hand it back in return for, say, goods forming part of its trading stock, then the market value of those goods, besides being brought into credit in the trading account, might constitute another distribution also attracting tax. However, presumably paragraph 1 (2) will not be applied with the harshness that a literal construction might justify.

The draftsman of paragraph 1 (2) perhaps overlooked the fact that the 'members' in paragraph 1 (2) can also be companies. Thus company S may be the wholly-owned subsidiary of H. If S makes transfers of assets to H for inadequate or no consideration, then on a strict reading of paragraph 1 (2) this is a 'distribution', notwithstanding the chargeable gains exemptions for intra-group transfers. Moreover, since the 'distribution' is not a 'dividend', the group cannot elect under section 48 (3) of the Finance Act 1965 to treat the 'distribution' as though it were not a distribution.

Thanks to the representations made to the Government, we now have paragraph 3 (2) of Schedule 11 to the new Finance Bill. It directs the addition of the following proviso to the old paragraph 1 (2):

'Provided that, where the company and the members receiving the benefit are both resident in the United Kingdom and either the former is the subsidiary of the latter or both are subsidiaries of a third company also so resident . . . the said amount shall be treated as a distribution only if, or to the extent that, it or a part of it would as so treated constitute also a relevant distribution within the meaning of section 65 of this Act.'

It will be seen that, as the CHIEF SECRETARY announced, this goes further than the representations in that it deals also with a transfer from the parent to the subsidiary at more than market value.

Both parties to the transaction must be resident in the United Kingdom, presumably at the time of the transaction. How is 'subsidiary' defined? For this purpose, the new proviso imports section 48 (3) of the Finance Act 1965 which in turn imports paragraphs 9-10 of Schedule 12 to that Act. The first thing to observe is that the three-quarter test (which applied for profits tax and has been imported into Schedule 13 in relation to intra-group chargeable gains) does not apply. For present purposes company S is a subsidiary of H if and so long as more than one-half of the ordinary share capital of S is owned by H. The ownership need not be direct; it can be through one or more other bodies corporate or partly in that way and partly directly. However, H is treated as not being the owner of share capital which it owns [sic] directly or indirectly in a non-resident body corporate. Furthermore, if there is share capital which is directly owned by a body corporate 'for which a profit on the sale of the shares would be a trading receipt', then H cannot own those shares for the purposes of paragraph 9 of Schedule 12. The words quoted are taken verbatim because of their curious ring. Their author must have somewhat vague ideas about the construction of a trading account, when he confuses the profit on a sale with the proceeds of that sale.

The limitation last mentioned is further extended for the purpose of the new proviso to paragraph 1 (2), although not for the purpose of section 48 (3) of the 1965 Act. The new proviso expressly directs that:

'a body shall be treated as not being the owner of any share capital which it owns [sic] directly if a profit on the sale of the shares would be a trading receipt of that body.'

What does 'owned' mean? For this, paragraph 10 of Schedule 12 to the 1965 Act (like paragraph 1 of Schedule 13) refers us back to the old profits tax provisions in section 42 (3) of the Finance Act 1938. This devotion to an Act already nearly thirty years old is touching, but it adds to the difficulties of construing current legislation. The latter is already so voluminous that the old 1938 provisions could well have been incorporated in still another Schedule to the Finance Act 1965. A similar reference back has to be made for the purpose of finding out what 'ordinary share capital' is. Both definitions are contained in the following brief subsection in the Finance Act 1938, section 42.

'(3) In this section and Part I of the said schedule references to ownership shall be construed as references to beneficial ownership, and the expression "ordinary share capital", in relation to a body corporate, means all the issued share capital (by whatever name called) of the body corporate, other than capital the holders whereof have a right to a dividend at a fixed rate or a rate fluctuating in accordance with the standard rate of income tax, but have no other right to share in the profits of the body corporate.'

In relation to stamp duty the Inland Revenue are apt to make difficulties about the satisfaction of the test of 'beneficial ownership'. Thus a company which has agreed to sell shares is no longer their beneficial owner. Similarly, if the persons controlling the company have agreed to procure it to sell shares it is no longer the beneficial owner of those shares. If a third party has an option to purchase the shares the position is rather more obscure; if the company passes a resolution to wind up then, strictly speaking, it no longer beneficially owns anything at all.

These considerations certainly make it more difficult (but not impossible) to abuse the relaxation conferred by paragraph 3 (2). However, the CHIEF SECRETARY gave a warning that the Government reserved the right to introduce retrospective legislation against avoidance devices. The problem facing business men is to define what is natural common sense, and what is an avoidance device.

For the close company – that pariah of the modern tax system – 'distribution' is given a much more extended meaning by paragraph 9 of Schedule 11 to the Finance Act 1965. Paragraph 9 (1), after dealing with interest, annuities, annual payments, rents and royalties goes on to provide in paragraph 9 (1) (d) that distribution includes '(d) any such amount as is required to be treated as a distribution by sub-paragraph (2) below'. Paragraph 9 (2) in effect extends paragraph 1 (2) from assets to services. It reads:

'(2) Where a close company incurs expense in connection with the provision for any participator' (which includes any associate of a participator) 'of living or other accommodation, of entertainment, of domestic or other services or of other benefits or facilities of whatever nature the company shall be treated as making a distribution to him of an amount equal to so much of that expense as is not made good to the company by the participator.'

The new Finance Bill introduces a corresponding relaxation in favour of intra-group benefits, provided that the benefits arise on, or in connection with, a transfer of assets or liabilities by the company to him [sic] or by him [sic] to the company. This change is made by paragraph 3 (3) in Schedule 11 to the new Bill, the draftsman of which insists on referring to what can only be a body corporate as 'him'. The definition of 'group' (a word which is not in fact used) is word for word the same as the definition in paragraph 3 (2), except that 'participator' is substituted for 'member'. It has to be borne in mind that for all the purposes of paragraph 9 of Schedule 11 to the 1965 Act 'any reference to a participator includes an associate of the participator'.

Both of the new relaxations – that for all companies and that for close companies – are subject to a restriction. Each of the new sub-paragraphs directs that the amount in question shall be treated as a distribution of the Finance Act 1965. This section 65, with Schedule 17, is a general anti-dividend-stripping provision which is, as it were, the converse of section 28 of the Finance Act 1960. Section 28 is in general aimed against individuals who sell shares in companies having accumulated profits, i.e. broadly speaking, individuals who are avoiding surtax. Section 65 is aimed against the persons who buy such shares with the object of obtaining relief in one form or another in respect of the tax which they are deemed to have paid when the shares produce a dividend out of pre-acquisition profits. Since section 65 is an anti-avoidance device, the framers of the new Bill are withholding the new relaxation from the distributions within it.

The new provisions about intra-group transfers and benefits are to be deemed always to have had effect; that is to say, they are retrospective to April 6th, 1966. They are complementary to the new liberalized provisions for subvention payment relief under clause 19 and Schedule 10. This, however, is not retrospective; it replaces the existing provisions in section 20 of the Finance Act 1953 as respects deficits of accounting periods ending after the Bill becomes law. Here the word 'group' is used, but the test as to what is a group is not the same. Two companies are deemed to be members of a group if one is the subsidiary of the other, or both are subsidiaries of a third. As to the word 'subsidiary', again the definition in the Finance Act 1938 is called in aid, but without modifying the old three-quarters test.

Irish Institute's New President

MR NIALL VALENTINE HOGAN, B.A., B.COMM., F.C.A., a partner in the firm of Reynolds, McCarron & Co, Chartered Accountants, of Dublin, was elected President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland at the seventy-ninth annual meeting of the Institute held in Dublin last Saturday.

Mr Hogan was born in Dublin on September 2nd, 1907. He was educated at Catholic University School, Dublin, and University College, Dublin, graduating with honours in commerce and economics.

Articled to the late Mr Jeremiah Buckley, of Kean & Co, Chartered Accountants, of Dublin, Mr Hogan passed the Final examination in November 1931, was admitted to membership of the Institute in February 1932 and became a partner in the firm of Reynolds, McCarron & Co in August 1935.

Mr Hogan, who acted as an Institute examiner for a number of years, was co-opted to the Council of the Institute in 1956 and has served on numerous committees including the Taxation Committee and the Future Plans Committee. He became Vice-President in 1966.

A keen sportsman, he obtained a university 'blue' for both rugby and tennis. He was President of the University College Rugby Club in 1953 and Captain of Elm Park Golf Club in 1951.

The new Vice-President of the Institute is Mr Thomas Desmond Lorimer, F.C.A., senior partner in the firm of Hugh Smylie & Sons, Chartered Accountants, of Belfast.

The Irish Institute's Year

THE presidential address, at the seventy-ninth annual meeting of members of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland held in Dublin last Saturday and reproduced elsewhere in this issue, highlights the principal activities of this the smallest of the major professional accountancy bodies in the British Isles. It reflects great credit on the Council that even with the necessarily limited resources at its command (the membership at the end of last year was 1,978 as compared with the English Institute's 42,457 and the Scottish Institute's 7,866), a complete programme of domestic events is carried out annually and participation in the affairs of the profession in the world at large is fully maintained.

The income and expenditure account for 1966 shows a deficit of £2,664 (as against a surplus of £810 for 1965) but this is accounted for largely by additional costs incurred in connection with the major revision of the Institute's Charter and by-laws. Otherwise, income and expenditure have kept neatly in step. The accumulated fund at December 31st, 1966, was £13,883.

The number of articles of clerkship registered during 1966 was 243 which is thirteen less than in 1965. At the summer session, 939 candidates in all presented themselves for the five parts of the Institute examination and 443, or 47 per cent, were successful. At the winter session, 50 per cent of the 721 candidates passed. In both sessions, there were more passes than failures in each of the first three parts of the examination but in Parts IV and V, there were on both occasions more failures than passes.

The main impression derived from reading the Council's report for 1966 is of the enthusiasm and the spirit of co-operation which seems to pervade everything that is attempted by members. The various conferences and courses continue to be well supported and the various district societies play, as always, a most constructive part in the furtherance of the Institute's educational programme. As an example, when the authorities of University College, Dublin, decided during the year that they were unable to continue to run lecture courses for accountancy students, the organization of the courses was taken over solely by the Dublin Society through its education subcommittee, an expedient which has proved to be most successful.

Decline in Profits

THE analysis of the accounts of public companies carried out by the Statistical Division of the Board of Trade each quarter are of more than passing interest to accountants, not least in his role as financial adviser to his clients. The latest analysis, in the Board of Trade Journal for May 5th, deals with the accounts of 331 companies whose accounting year ended in April 1966 or later. In fact 50 per cent of these accounts related to a financial year ending between October and December. Of those companies, only 90 gave figures of turnover, but these particular companies accounted for two-thirds of the aggregate profits of the 331 companies and their turnover rose by about 6½ per cent between 1965 and 1966, from £4,846 million to £5,160 million.

In contrast, the profits of the group overall fell by nearly 6 per cent, reflecting, of course, a reduction of about 1 per cent in profit margins, i.e. from 9.5 per cent to 8.4 per cent, which has become a feature of most company reports in recent months. Gross income, including trading profits as well as investment and other income, for the 331 companies fell by 7 per cent from £735 million to £683 million.

This is, in fact, the first recorded fall in public companies' profits as a whole since the Board of Trade's analysis of the 1962 accounts. Last year, for example, the same sample of 331 companies enjoyed a modest increase of 2 per cent in profits. At the same time, due care must be exercised in assessing these results as a guide to future corporate earnings for 1966. This sample of 331 companies is heavily biased, with steel companies and breweries over-represented, compared with their importance in the annual analysis of accounts. On the other hand, the chemical industry, non-electrical engineering, and the distributive trades are under-represented.

Over one-third of the 331 companies in the sample incorporated investment grants in their accounts, the majority of them deducting the value of the expected grant from the expenditure on the relevant fixed asset. Some companies included prospective investment grants in reserves and did not deduct them from expenditure on fixed assets, while others made allocations from the investment grant reserve to the profit and loss account.

The Board of Trade statisticians estimate that £123 million was distributed in dividends last year compared with £138 million for the same companies a year earlier, a drop of almost 11 per cent. The authors conclude that 'even after making allowance for the inflation of the comparable 1965 figures by income tax retained on dividends paid before April 6th, 1966, the figures for retained profits last year were considerably lower both in real terms and proportionately than in the previous year'.

Investment Grant Expenses Deductible

THE combined efforts of the three Chartered Institutes and The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants have obtained from the Board of Inland Revenue a substantial concession for taxpayers in general who claim the new investment grants.

As announced elsewhere in this issue, in the report of the proceedings of the Council of the English Institute, the Board of Inland Revenue have agreed to a request that accountants' charges for work done and reports given in connection with claims will be allowed to be deducted in computing the claimant's profits for tax purposes.

Standard Classification of Hotel Accounts

A RESEARCH report into a uniform system of hotel accounting for British hoteliers has been completed by the Scottish Hotel School of the University of Strathclyde.

The report recommends that the trade associations and the accountancy bodies should combine to form a working party which, basing its thinking on the report, would promulgate and endorse a classification of accounts for standard practice.

The principal advantages to be gained from the establishment of a standard classification are stated by the report to be:

- (1) Accounting terminology would be standardized and mean precisely the same thing to all hoteliers.
- (2) Hotel staff would not have to learn different accounting methods whenever they moved to new situations.
- (3) All hotels, irrespective of type or size, would use the one basic accounting method, and this would be the best method from the point of view of management control over hotel operations.
- (4) Standardized accounting would mean that figures used in inter-hotel comparison schemes would be definitely constituted, thus rendering comparison valid.
- (5) With the establishment of a standard, basic, accounting method, other forms of control accounting such as standard costing could be researched and also accepted on a uniform basis.

Examples of final accounts presentation, suitable for a whole range of hotels, are also included in the report in order to demonstrate the applicability of the classification to different hotels. Fears that uniformity in accounting would only be applicable to large hotels and hotel companies are regarded as groundless. Indeed the whole system is designed for easy adoption by small hotels.

The report does not advocate the standardization of book-keeping methods as a means of supporting the classification. This is one of its strong points. Hoteliers would not need to alter their existing book-keeping system, nor would they have to accept the introduction of any new book of account. Changes would only be confined to the accounts heading to which specific items of income and expenditure should be posted.

A limited number of copies of the report (150 pages) are available to interested members of the industry and accountancy profession at a charge of 21s inclusive of postage, from the Scottish Hotel School, Ross Hall, Crookston Road, Glasgow SW2.

Limit on Sharkey v. Wernher

THE House of Lords' decision in Sharkey v. Wernher (34 A.T.C. 264) introduced a startling principle into income tax, namely, that a taxpayer can make a profit out of himself. Lady Wernher kept a stud which amounted to a trade, and racing stables which did not.

When she transferred a horse from the one to the other (after the cost of producing it had been charged in the stud accounts), the Revenue claimed that the market value should be credited in the stud accounts. Appealing against this, Lady Wernher's husband conceded that something needed to be credited in the stud accounts. In the face of that concession, the House of Lords held they were bound to come to the conclusion that the 'something' must be the market value.

It is unfortunate, however, that that concession was ever made. The decision to which it gave rise has introduced some strange anomalies. It has also encouraged the Inland Revenue to claim tax on cognate transactions. However, in one sphere at least this extension has been refused – an author can give away a copyright without having to pay tax on it, for last week the Court of Appeal dismissed the Revenue's appeal from the decision of Mr Justice Goff on December 9th in Mason v. Innes.

Mr Hammond Innes, the author, had carried out a trip to the Persian Gulf in 1953. His accounts were

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

OUR latest profits and financial forecast for the balance of this year and for the two years ahead was taking shape. We had received estimates of sales, mark-ups and gross return from the sales departments, albeit slowly and with much muttering about unpredictable weather, credit squeezes, slumps, competition, and what have you. Scotty said morosely that he'd just as soon use a crystal ball or stick a pin in a sheet of paper. Our rotund departmental accountant merely smiled and said that he didn't mind. (So long as the salesmen produce the figures; so long as he is free of responsibility, he couldn't care less.)

The cost accountant, zealous and untiring, assembled the other figures needed. Our maintenance engineer was cheerfully unconcerned about the repairs estimate for buildings and delivery vehicles. Say about a hundred thousand, as a basis, plus or minus 50 per cent – well, perhaps 40 per cent, he hazarded. Mean to say, we can always change it later; flexing the forward budget, that's the new jargon, isn't it? Costs referred scathingly to the meticulous hairline precision symptomatic of the great professions and they parted somewhat ruffled.

Next we had some group discussions on taxes, dividends and capital commitments, and some heated arguments about depreciation. Salaries and wages were thrice estimated and re-estimated by Prinny, with a cautious qualification that his figures weren't to be taken as accurate or binding at this stage. Gradually, the jigsaw was accumulated.

At length only one item was outstanding – a final decision on a project mooted several times and now arriving at 'preliminary estimate' stage. Should we or should we not seriously contemplate buying and demolishing a small block of derelict property to the rear of our premises, with a view to extending into the grocery supermarket business? The outlay would be substantial; the return on investment excellent in the long run. Finally I approached the managing director for an indication of his views.

That redoubtable captain of industry, needless to say, was not to be drawn thus easily. At first he rather pooh-poohed the idea. Grandiose wishful thinking, he smiled, serenely unconscious that I had already glimpsed – by accident, of course – an architect's blue-print of the plan. Why not prepare two forecasts, as an alternative, he suggested next, just to see what the forward picture looked like.

Our costing staff, mind-readers to a man, had in fact furnished me with a sheet of approximate first-run project figures; the managing director pretended to be surprised as he scanned them. Buildings, furnishings, additional liquid capital . . . excellent; annual revenue, outlay in salaries and wages, heat and light, rates, interest on capital . . . a startled query! Why full interest on capital? Hadn't we discussed a rights issue at a premium? That portion of capital would cost us nothing; we'd finance it ourselves.

I explained about dividends as a charge for service but these he saw as something in the appropriation account, so to my mind the next alternative base case was investment at, say, 7 per cent. We lost this return on capital if we put the funds into property. But this comparison was fallacious since we wouldn't at any stage invest in securities, rejoined the director, explaining that by avoiding interest on overdraft (since we wouldn't draw on the bank) we had, in fact, free use of the money. Besides, we could cut our dividend in order to accentuate the principle of cheapness.

For a moment we seemed to be in different worlds. To borrow would cost us interest, reiterated the M.D., patently surprised at my obtuseness. To finance the expansion from our own resources would cost us nothing at this stage, since it was shareholders' money which would ultimately accrue to their benefit either in enhanced asset values or in capitalization of reserves at some later date.

The explanation of the distinction between the forecast and the project justification, or between appropriation of profits and net return on investment, somehow didn't get through to him for some time. We are now finalizing comparisons with the base case in big coloured block diagrams to enlighten the blockhead.

on a cash basis and the expenses of the trip were charged in them. The material gathered was used in the writing of a book called The Doomed Oasis. In 1960, when the copyright of this book was worth £15,245, Mr Innes gave it to his father. The Revenue sought to bring in this sum as a profit on the date of the gift. The Master of the Rolls said that it was an elementary principle that a man could not be taxed on profits which he might have made but did not. Sharkey v. Wernher had established an exception in the case of a trader, and this had been extended in Petrotim Securities Ltd v. Ayres (42 A.T.C. 421). However, the principle should not be extended to a professional man who had no trading stock. If he made a present of one of his works, no receipt fell to be brought in because none was received.

Value Passing Out of Shares

CONTRIBUTED

In this article the writer discusses a point in connection with the issue of a close company's shares at an undervalue which can have serious repercussions for a controlling shareholder in terms of capital gains tax.

THE owner of a family company not infrequently desires to settle shares in the company on discretionary or accumulating trusts for the benefit of members of his family. But if the settlement of existing shares of the company would attract liability to capital gains tax by virtue of section 25 (2) of the Finance Act 1965, the idea may occur to him to procure the company to issue shares at par to the trustees of the settlement under the mistaken impression that this procedure will obviate the charge to tax. Again, the proprietor of the company may decide that, for estate duty purposes, he holds too large a proportion of the company's shares himself, and he may arrange for the company to issue new shares at an undervalue to his wife and children.

The provision in the Act of 1965 which makes it necessary to examine any such proposal with particular care is paragraph 15 (2) of Schedule 7 to the Act which provides that

'If a person having control of a company exercises his control so that value passes out of shares in the company owned by him or a person with whom he is connected, or out of rights over the company exercisable by him or by a person with whom he is connected, and passes into other shares in or rights over the company, that shall be a disposal of the shares or rights out of which the value passes by the person by whom they were owned or exercisable.'

It is not difficult to see that the issue of shares at an undervalue may be caught by this sub-paragraph; but, if so, how is the capital gain on the deemed disposal of the old shares or rights to be computed?

For this purpose one has first to turn to paragraph 15 (1) of Schedule 7, which provides, inter alia, that any transaction of the kind referred to in sub-paragraph (2) will be treated as the disposal of an asset, with the corresponding acquisition of an interest in the asset notwithstanding that no consideration passes. Moreover, on the assumption that the person making the disposal could have obtained consideration or additional consideration for the disposal if the transaction had been carried out at arm's length, the transaction will be treated as not having been carried out at arm's length, and the consideration or additional consideration when added to the consideration actually passing will be treated as the market value of what is acquired.

The computation

Accordingly, the deemed disposal of the old shares will be regarded as having taken place at market value, and the amount by which the price of acquisition of the new shares falls short of market value will be added to that price. The chargeable gain will be the difference in value of the old shares before and after the issue of the new shares, less allowable expenditure under paragraph 4 of Schedule 6 to the 1965 Act, which will include that proportion of the original cost of the old shares which their fall in value bears to their value before the issue of the new shares.

An example will illustrate how this works. X company has a share capital of £3,000 in 3,000 shares of £1 each, of which 2,700 shares are beneficially held by A and 300 shares are held by his wife B. Both A and B's shares were acquired on April 6th, 1965, at £7 a share but are now worth £10 a share, so that if any of the shares became the subject of a gift in settlement a chargeable gain would clearly arise. In an attempt to avoid capital gains tax, A arranges for the company to issue and allot 1,500 shares at par to the trustees of a discretionary trust which he is setting up for the benefit of his children. As a result of this arrangement it is not only A who will be caught by paragraph 15 (2) but also B, since B is a person with whom A is connected within paragraph 21 of Schedule 7.

Consequent upon the issue of the 1,500 new shares the value of the old shares will fall to  $\frac{£30,000 \times 30,000}{£45,000}$

=£20,000. The chargeable gain will therefore be £10,000, less expenses, including the relevant proportion of the original cost of the old shares, which will be  $\frac{£21,000 \times 10,000}{£30,000}$  = £7,000; so that A and B's chargeable gain will be £10,000 - £7,000 = £3,000, less other expenses, if any. The acquisition price of the new shares to the trustees will be £1,500 (original cost) + £10,000 (the fall in value of the old shares) = £11,500.

Rights over the company

It will be seen that paragraph 15 (2) applies not only where value passes out of shares held by the controlling shareholder and a connected person but also where value passes out of rights over the company exercisable by such persons.

Example: X company has 25,000 voting shares of £1 each and 15,000 non-voting shares of £1 each. All the voting shares are owned by A who acquired them in July 1965 at £2 a share; and all the non-voting shares are held by B who acquired them at the same time at 30s a share. B is A's son, and A arranges for the non-voting shares to have full voting rights along with the existing voting shares. Immediately before this arrangement the voting shares were worth £4 a share and afterwards are worth £3 a share. The non-voting shares were worth £2 a share before the arrangement and £3 a share after the arrangement.

A will be liable to capital gains tax on £4 - £3 = £1 a share, amounting to £25,000, less a proportion of the cost of acquisition of the original voting shares, viz.,

$\frac{£50,000 \times 25,000}{£100,000}$  = £12,500, so that the net gain (less other expenses) will be £25,000 - £12,500 = £12,500. The acquisition price of B's shares will be deemed to be 15,000 × 30s = £22,500 plus the loss in value on A's shares = £12,500, making a total of £35,000.

Necessary conditions

There are three conditions which must be satisfied before paragraph 15 (2) can apply to a transaction, viz.: (i) that a person controls the company; (ii) that that person exercises his control so that value passes out of shares or out of rights over the company owned or exercisable by him; and (iii) that value passes into other shares in or rights over the company.

'Control' for the purposes of paragraph 15 (2) has the same meaning as in paragraph 3 of Schedule 18 to the 1965 Act, so that its meaning is very extensive. Under paragraph 3 a person has control if he can in fact control the company's affairs, or if he has or can acquire a majority of the voting rights or share capital, or if he has rights whereby he might obtain more than half the income or assets of the company, whether on the distribution of the whole of its income or on its being wound up or otherwise.

Normally a person having control of a company will exercise his control by the use of his voting powers, and it will be difficult to imagine circumstances in which value passes out of shares owned by him or out of rights over the company exercisable by him, without the exercise of his power of control. It could be contended that if the controlling director goes abroad and during his absence the remaining directors allot new shares in the company to his son, that will not be the exercise of control by the controlling director. But it would be understandable if the Revenue did not accept such a contention.

In Crossland v. Hawkins (40 A.T.C. 126; 39 T.C. 493) shares of a company receiving earnings of a child's father allotted to trustees of a settlement created by the child's grandfather for the benefit of the child were held, on the facts, to be an 'arrangement' within section 397 of the Income Tax Act 1952. It did not avail the taxpayer that he had not been an active party to the arrangement, since he had been aware of the proposals of his accountants and solicitors and that steps were being taken to put them into effect.

Paragraph 15 (2) will not, of course, apply to every issue of a close company's shares at an undervalue, or to every transaction involving a change of voting rights. Paragraph 4 (2) of Schedule 7 provides that a reorganization of a company's share capital (which includes a bonus issue or rights issue of shares by virtue of paragraph 4 (1) (a) (i)) will not be treated as involving any disposal of the original shares or any acquisition of the new shares or any part of them, but the original shares taken as a single asset and the new shares taken as a single asset will be treated as the same asset acquired as the original shares were acquired.

The question therefore arises whether any use can be made of paragraph 4 (2) so as to nullify or modify the effect of paragraph 15 (2) in particular circumstances. It appears that there will be no such possibility where the allottees do not take up their respective entitlements. Assume that A holds 500 voting shares and B 200 voting shares in X company, and that the company makes a rights issue of one share for every two shares held at par, which is an undervalue. B takes up his entitlement of 100 shares but A neglects to take up his entitlement of 250 shares. A is the controlling shareholder; he will have exercised his control in procuring the company to make the rights issue, and value will have passed out of his shares as a result of the issue of 100 shares to B at par.

Provisional allotment of shares

If A renounces the provisional allotment of 250 shares in X company to him in favour of B, paragraph 8 (1) of Schedule 10 to the Finance Act 1966 will apply. This sub-paragraph provides that where a person receives or becomes entitled to receive in respect of any shares in a company a provisional allotment of shares in the company and he disposes of his rights to the new shares, paragraph 3 of Schedule 7 to the 1965 Act is to apply as if the amount of the consideration for the disposal were a capital distribution received by him from the company in respect of the original shares and as if that person had, instead of disposing of the rights, disposed of an interest in the original shares. Consequently, if the Inspector of Taxes is satisfied that the capital distribution is small as compared with the value of the shares in respect of which it is made, he may direct that the disposal of the rights shall not be treated as the disposal of an interest in the shares, but that the proceeds shall be deducted from the capital expenditure allowable as a deduction in computing a gain or loss on the ultimate disposal of the shares in question.

Under paragraph 4 (6) of Schedule 7 to the 1965 Act, where a person disposed of rights to subscribe for new shares, the rights were treated as if they were the shares to which they related and as if the consideration to be given for the shares were a liability attached to the rights. But where the original shares had increased considerably in value, this method of charging the capital gains tax gave rise to a disproportionately high charge in respect of the disposal of the rights, and by virtue of paragraph 8 (4) of Schedule 10 to the 1966 Act paragraph 4 (6) of Schedule 7 to the 1965 Act ceases to have effect.

It has been seen that paragraph 15 (2) of Schedule 7 to the 1965 Act will not apply where value passes out of a minority shareholding unless the minority shareholder is connected with the majority shareholder. The same position applies to the voting rights attached to a minority shareholding. Assume that A holds 30,000 voting shares and B holds the remaining 20,000 voting shares in X company. B is A's father, and A exercises his control (with B's concurrence) whereby B's shares are converted into non-voting shares so that they will be less valuable for estate duty purposes. So far from value having passed out of A's majority shareholding, the shares will have increased in value as a result of the transaction. Value will have passed out of B's shares, but he is not the controlling shareholder.

Owner of land becoming lessee

Paragraph 15 (2) of Schedule 7 to the 1965 Act is concerned with shares and 'rights over the company'. Paragraph 15 (3) is concerned with land and 'any other description' of property. It provides that if, after a transaction which results in the owner of land or of any other description of property becoming the lessee of the property, there is any adjustment of the rights and liabilities under the lease, whether or not involving the grant of a new lease, which is as a whole favourable to the lessor, that shall be a disposal by the lessee of an interest in the property.

This kind of situation can arise by a freeholder or leaseholder selling the freehold or assigning his lease to a third person and then taking a lease or sublease of the property from such third person; or by a freeholder becoming an underlessee of his own lease. Thus, it is not uncommon for a father to make a gift of land to his son, and then for the son to grant a lease back of the property to the father at a full economic rent. This is a method of saving estate duty which has received statutory blessing under section 35 (2) of the Finance Act 1959, which restored the position which existed before the decision of the Privy Council in Chick v. Stamp Duties Commissioner of New South Wales ([1958] 1 All E.R. 623). Section 35 (2), however, confers the same benefit in relation to chattels which, if given away and then hired back for full consideration in money or money's worth, will escape duty subject to compliance with other statutory provisions.

Paragraph 15 (3) of Schedule 7 will apply where, for example, X sells his freehold property to Y, and Y leases the property back to X. Then, after the grant of the lease, there is an adjustment of the rights and liabilities under the lease which, as a whole, are favourable to the lessor, for example, by the lessor taking on additional burdens such as liability for rates, repairs and the like, or being himself relieved of some such obligations imposed on him by the terms of the lease. The same position would also obtain if X owned plant and machinery which he sold to Y who leased them back to X, after which there was an adjustment of the terms of the leasing agreement which, as a whole, are favourable to the lessor.

Extinction of rights

Paragraph 15 (4) of Schedule 7 to the 1965 Act states that if an asset is subject to any description of right or restriction, the extinction or abrogation in whole or in part of the right or restriction by the person entitled to enforce it shall be a disposal by him of the right or restriction. The rights or restrictions envisaged are an easement of support, a right of way, a restrictive covenant as to user, the reservation of mineral rights and the like.

Example: X sells land to Y subject to a restriction that the land is not to be used for the purposes of opencast coal mining, which right is reserved to X. Later, at the request of Y, X abrogates the restriction on payment by Y of the sum of £2,000. The market value of this right previously reserved by X is £2,500, and by virtue of paragraph 15 (1) of Schedule 7 that sum will be treated as the market value of what is acquired. This sum will be compared with the cost to X of acquiring the right and any gain or loss will be subject to the capital gains tax provisions.

The scope of paragraph 15 of Schedule 7 is thus quite extensive, but the most dangerous of its provisions is doubtless sub-paragraph (2) which can quite easily be overlooked when new shares in a close company are issued at an undervalue.

The new deal from Cunard: Secretaries 12-hours a day, on your way to New York.

Our business philosophy is blunt but practical. 'If you've time to spare go by air. But you can work harder, on board a Cunarder!' Look at it this way—you can fly the Atlantic in next to no time. And spend the next day recovering. Or . . .

You can catch a Thursday Queen from Southampton. Then Friday and Saturday are normal working days. And Sunday and Monday too, if you feel like it. We'll give you every assistance, believe us. Direct ship-to-shore telephone linkage to anywhere in the world from the telephone in your 1st Class stateroom. Secretaries, dictating machines, rooms for conferences, reference library, market reports daily from London and Wall Street. You name it, we'll fix it for you . . .

The only thing you'll miss from your present office is interruptions. We won't tell you about our restaurants, swimming pools, gymnasiums, turkish baths, etc, in case you get tempted away from your work. So on Tuesday when we put you ashore straight into mid-town Manhattan, you can feel as exhausted as if you'd worked as usual! # When considering a Merger three heads are better than two

A good merger should not be a regrettable necessity but a welcome form of progress. For many a small or medium sized company, competing against bigger rivals, profitable rewards can come from merging with another company in the same or a complementary line of business. The advantages—rationalisation of production and distribution, shared research and experience, greater financial strength—can mean all the difference between continued progress on the one hand, stagnation on the other.

Effecting the right merger with the right partner at the right time is a delicate and expert task needing the services of a third party. That is why Industrial Mergers Ltd. has been established.

Industrial Mergers Ltd. is a subsidiary of Industrial and Commercial Finance Corporation. With its own special knowledge plus the backing of I.C.F.C., it has unequalled experience in the small and medium sized company sector of British industry and possesses financial resources to provide the funds which are often necessary to realise the full potential of a merger.

Industrial Mergers Ltd. is impartial. Our sole interest is to arrange a merger of genuine benefit to both parties. Negotiations are absolutely confidential.

If you think we can help you please write to Mr. E. R. Izod, Manager, Industrial Mergers Ltd., or to the Manager of any ICFC Branch Office throughout the country. If he feels the time is not yet ripe he will tell you so. If he thinks you would do better to stay independent, he can help you safeguard your independence.

The Policy of the Land Commission

by SIR HENRY WELLS, Chairman of the Land Commission

THE general policy of the Land Commission so far formulated and as outlined in this paper has the full support of my colleagues on the Land Commission, and the Minister agrees with it. The Land Commission Act, which our democratically elected Parliament has passed, lays down the guide lines within which the Commission has to operate. Parliament has given the Commission responsible for its administration, wide powers of discretion as to the method by which the objects of the Act are to be achieved. Thus the intention of the remarks which follow is to explain to those who are interested as professional advisers, landowners or developers – be they in the private or public sectors – how the Commission, in the light of its thought so far, intends to exercise its discretionary powers. As the policy of the Commission develops with the advantage of experience, I hope I shall have future occasions to tell you its thoughts.

It is not my intention in these remarks to explain the Act. This has been adequately done – at least for the time being – by Government memoranda and privately published books. Indeed, unless you are acquainted with the general construction and objects of the Act, some of my remarks may be meaningless to you.

The Commission is responsible to the Minister of Housing and Local Government, but Mr Fred Willey, the Minister of State, whose functions cover the relations of the Commission with the Ministry, said in Parliament:

‘I assure the House that it is my intention that the Land Commission shall be an independent body, substantially exercising its own discretion and judgement. . . .’

The Commission welcomes this comment and will not abuse the trust given to it. The Commission also agrees with Edmund Burke who in a letter to Fox in 1777 said ‘if laws are their (i.e. the people’s) enemies, they (the people) will be enemies to law’. Thus no member of the Commission accepted the invitation to serve until he was first satisfied that at least the general objectives which the Act sets out to achieve could be attained by pursuing a sensible policy and administration acceptable to the British people. And that this could be done in such a way that all those concerned in property transactions and development, whether in the private or public sector, would in due time regard the Commission as an ally, much in the same way as in the export field manufacturers regard the Export Credits Guarantee Department of the Board of Trade. In short, the Commission intends to use its powers to help the development industry (including the professions concerned) and as I will be explaining later to help those public authorities who wish to have our help.

The Commission regards Part II of the Act as being more important than Part III. There are three principal reasons for this:

- (1) The Commission believes that, while the private sector should be able to operate competitively at a profit and be able to attract and use risk capital and make quick decisions, nevertheless the State has to construct some framework within which the private sector can so operate, particularly as we are an overcrowded small island with limited natural resources which have to be used with as little waste as possible.

In some fields of activity we, that is the British, have built this framework – for example, the provision of power on a national network basis for use by industry and in homes. Power is as much a raw material for manufacturing and housing as land is to the house builder or commercial developer. No house builder or developer can develop, as his regular business, unless he can be assured of a steady supply of land in the right place at the right time. Thus the Commission intends to administer Part II in such a way that small and large developers (that is the development industry as a whole) are adequately supplied with land. Furthermore, it hopes it will be able to secure for development by the private sector land in units of such a size and so situated in relation to industry and services, that development or redevelopment will be more economical than in the past, both to developers and to the nation.

- (2) The discretion given to the Commission under Part II is considerably more than that given under Part III. The Commission believes that where transactions or development take place entirely within the private sector the machinery devised under Part III for assessing and collecting levy is fair and workable and the best so far devised. It has noted from various statements made by opposing political leaders that there seems to be general agreement that some kind of levy, tax or fee should in equity be charged on those who because of our sophisticated planning system receive a financial gain denied to others by virtue of the same planning system. I do not believe after some twenty-five years’ close association with the search for a solution to the ‘betterment’ problem that there is a simple solution such as leaving ‘betterment’ to be collected through capital gains tax. For example, large development companies do not realize their investment developments except by borrowing on the assets they have created. Thus their ‘betterment’ would not be caught by a capital gains tax. But the Commission recognizes that Part III has one disadvantage. The disadvantage in Part III is that it will be several months after a vendor (case A) or lessor (case B) or developer (case C) has done a ‘chargeable act or event’ before he knows what his betterment levy liability is. But, as I will explain later, in many cases this uncertainty can be removed by agreement between the Commission and other parties involved by invoking the Commission’s powers under Part II.
- (3) The Act is so constructed that the profits (including the 40 per cent of development value) made as a result of the Commission's land dealing operations under Part II go into a 'Land Trading Fund' virtually under the Commission's control whereas the betterment levy received under Part III gets lost in the general pool of national taxation. When the fund has been built up in this way the Commission will be able to use it for trading at a loss in those areas where the acquisition cost is greater than the value of the land which would be realized as a result of a planned redevelopment. It follows that the more profit the Commission can make under Part II the more it will be able in due course to help the private sector in getting the so-called 'twilight areas' redeveloped – and central areas as well – where the high cost of acquisition might otherwise discourage desirable redevelopment.

Commission's administrative structure

Before I make more detailed comments on Parts II and III, a brief description of the Commission's administrative arrangements will be helpful. As you probably know the Commission comprises nine persons including the Director (secretary) and myself; apart from the former we are part-time members but some are less part-time than others. The part-time members cover by qualification and experience the appropriate professional or commercial skills concerned with land and its development. And they are reasonably well spread in a geographical sense. The Commission's headquarters are at Kenton Bar on the outskirts of Newcastle. But there is in Victoria, London, what is rather euphemistically called the 'Chairman's suite', which is where I am based and where some meetings can be arranged. There are nine regional offices in England and one each in Scotland and Wales. Each office is commanded by a Controller. It is to these offices that matters on individual cases arising out of Part II or Part III should be referred.

The Commission's professional advisers on betterment levy valuations are the Valuation Office of the Inland Revenue. The Chief Valuer assures me that his office has sufficient staff for this work. The Valuation Office is not, however, directly concerned with the disposal of land acquired by the Commission. It is hoped that private firms will be willing to assist the Commission on disposals in the same way and on the same terms as if the Commission were a commercial concern. But if the disposal price is a negotiated one as distinct, for example, from a sale by auction, the sale price would be 'franked' by the District Valuer. The Commission will shortly be consulting the professional societies so that panels of surveyors and estate agents willing to act for the Commission can be set up in each region.

The Commission proposes to set up Regional Advisory Committees on a voluntary basis in each region. It hopes that leading personalities from the 'profession of the land' and those otherwise concerned with development and from local government will be willing to serve on these committees. The purpose of Regional Advisory Committees is twofold; first so that the Commission can be generally and constructively advised about the problems in the regions and suggestions made as to what action should or should not be taken. Secondly, so that through these committees the general policy of the Commission can be disseminated over as wide a field as possible. Indeed, in the light of comments made by the Regional Advisory Committees, the Commission's policy could be influenced.

It is hoped that the committees will be chaired by persons outside the Commission's organization but they will be serviced by the Regional Controllers.

Before I leave this brief sketch of the administrative arrangements, I should tell you that the members of the Commission take the view that it is their function to be concerned with policy. It is for the Commission's staff to execute that policy. The line between policy and executive responsibility seems, in relation to the Commission's functions, to be fairly easily definable. No individual case will in the normal course of events be referred to the Commission itself, unless there is something unusual about it or it raises a new policy issue. Thus if anyone has a query or complaint about an individual case, he should write or telephone to the appropriate Regional Office. If the case raises unusual problems the Regional Office will refer it to Headquarters. Furthermore, do not hesitate to ask the Regional Offices about any matters concerning the Commission's functions which are worrying you. The Regional Controllers and their staff are there to serve you and the public.

Betterment levy (Part III)

I do not propose to say much about betterment levy for two reasons; first because, as I said earlier on, in writing this paper I have assumed you have read the several Government explanatory memoranda or Desmond Heap's most readable book<sup>1</sup> or one or other of the more detailed books recently published. Secondly, I think that there is a danger of too heavy weather being made of Part III. This kind of legislation always looks frightening until one has grasped the basic principles on which it is drafted. Once a valuer has done this the solution to the various equations as well as the equations themselves fall naturally and I believe easily into place. In the vast majority of land transactions and development the valuer will know from his experience whether or not the case will throw up a levy assessment and will have a reasonable idea what the assessment will be. But I urge you in your own interests if you are acting for a vendor (case A) or a lessor (case B) or a developer (case C) to tell your client at the time the deal is being made whether or not in your opinion there is a likely liability for levy. Furthermore I think that you have at least a moral duty to tell your client what in your opinion is likely to be the order of betterment levy he will have to pay. Remember that the valuer's fees are one of the items which can be deducted from market value in the calculation. This follows the procedure for assessing capital gains tax. Thus in effect 40 per cent of the fees come off the levy.

There are three further matters which I should mention in relation to Part III. The first concerns the Commission's theoretical discretion under section 44 as to charging levy at all. This discretion is limited in practice because the Commission is financially responsible, ultimately, to Parliament to whom it must justify on financial grounds any reduction of levy or any extension of the de minimis arrangements already written into the Act. Thus the permissive form of section 44 and other sections does not allow the Commission to exempt anyone from levy, or reduce the amount of levy, on grounds of hardship. It does, however, have discretion, by using its own commercial judgement, over the right to postpone or to accept levy by instalments. By the same token it will not try to collect an agreed levy where the cost of so doing is obviously higher than the levy; this can only be decided in light of experience. It also should not be overlooked that the statutory addition of 10 per cent to the base value is a kind of de minimis. Furthermore levy is only chargeable where material development is in question and I would emphasize the word material. As you can see if you study the Material Development Regulations there are many classes of development which are not material development and on which levy therefore is not chargeable. 'Material development' is thus narrower in its scope than 'development' under the Town and Country Planning Acts. This constitutes a further tolerance.

The second particular matter on Part III arises out of sections 61, 62 and 67 which deal with the transitional period. Under section 61 there is exemption for a single dwelling-house built for yourself or your family including the in-laws or an adopted or illegitimate son or daughter. Moreover, under section 62, which is more complicated, builders or developers who were in business immediately before the White Paper day, September 23rd, 1965, may build housing etc. on land which they owned or leased where the land at the time carried a planning permission to develop. One hopes that, sooner or later, land bought before September 23rd, 1965, will all have been developed and these sections will no longer serve their functional purpose.

Another type of transitional case concerns the much discussed section 67. This section deals in particular with how to define the project of material development started before the first appointed day and as such not liable to levy. There is no doubt that this is a difficult section to understand. I do not think I want to add anything to Mr Desmond Heap's exposition of it on pages 42 to 46 of his book. In short, the Commission takes the same view as Mr Heap. For me to go into a full interpretation of section 67 is, in the circumstances, unjustified and would take up a lot of time.

The section goes on to deal with a case where work is begun which is not authorized by any planning permission. In these circumstances the project which is exempt is confined to the land upon which those operations began to be carried out before the first appointed day, i.e. if you have put in excavations for a single house you may build that house without liability to levy but of course no further material development. There is also the problem of the developer who found himself with what appeared to be a new planning permission covering less land than his original outline planning permission, and started development before the appointed day. To meet this situation, provided the second application for planning permission is within the ambit and scope of the outline planning permission, then the Land Commission will regard it as seeking approval of the details in accordance with the outline planning permission.

Thirdly, a few words on paragraph 1 of Schedule 9. The object of this was to help the man whose land is being bought under threat of compulsory purchase, in most cases from local authorities, whether this is done by way of a compulsory purchase order followed by a notice to treat or by negotiation. As the vendor had no choice in the matter of sale, where negotiations had reached a sufficiently advanced stage for contracts to be exchanged or a notice to treat served, the vendor should not have to pay levy. The Valuation Office in fact took special steps with local authorities to ensure that, if what is called a memorandum of agreement – something short of an enforceable contract or notice to treat – could be signed before the appointed day, that would suffice and the transaction would be regarded as sufficiently near completion for it to escape levy. Obviously where a local authority did not regard the negotiations over price etc. as sufficiently far forward for a memorandum of agreement to be signed, pressure could not be put upon them and I dare say that a few vendors will feel aggrieved on that score. In general, however, I hope that this provision will have helped in a good many cases.

The third particular point arising on the administration of Part III is whether or not the Commission issues notices in those cases where there is no assessment for levy. It is estimated that there are something like one to one and a half million transactions in land each year, of which only 100,000 to 150,000 would give rise to a levy assessment. The cost of issuing 'nil' notices would be considerable and in any event would have to be so worded that the Commission stated that on the facts at present in front of it there seemed to be no evidence for charging levy. In other words, the door would have to be kept open in case the Commission had been misinformed or had not been given all the appropriate facts. But it is open to any vendor, lessor or developer, or their professional advisers, if they have not heard within a few months, to write to the appropriate Regional Office and inquire whether any particular 'chargeable act or event' has given rise to an assessment for levy. The Regional Office will give all the help it can – nevertheless, it would still have to say, where it is thought that no levy is assessable, that this view was based on the information then in front of it. This is much the same position as under normal taxation practice. In reply to a Parliamentary Question the Minister said on March 23rd

'Advice on particular cases can be sought from the appropriate office of the Land Commission who will inform the applicant whether on the facts before them levy appears to be payable.'

It would be a waste of everybody's time to correspond with the Regional Office in such cases, as for example, a normal sale of a small suburban house with no adjoining plot of land which was capable of development. And do not forget that an addition of up to 1,000 sq. ft of floor space to an existing house is exempt from levy, as also is the lateral conversion into flats of up to three adjoining houses.

Land acquisition, management and disposal (Part II)

In my opening remarks, I dealt with some aspects of the Commission's policy in relation to its land-dealing functions under Part II, and stressed that the Commission intended to use its powers to help the industry to get on with development.

This covers a very wide field, and the Commission's powers are correspondingly wide. It has power to buy any land which in its opinion is suitable for material development. And it can use compulsory powers where there is a planning decision, which includes a proposal by a local planning authority, to the effect that material development can be carried out, so long as the purpose of the acquisition comes under one or other of four headings:

- (a) securing early development of land where this is necessary;
- (b) securing that land is developed as a whole;
- (c) acting as agents for other bodies with compulsory powers;

- (d) providing land for housing under concessionary crownhold arrangements.

But the Commission will not have unlimited funds – the Act allows it in the first instance to borrow up to £45 million from the Treasury. For this reason, and especially until the Commission has been able to build up its Land Trading Fund as I indicated earlier, it will have to husband its resources carefully and operate on the basis of priorities.

The first priority must undoubtedly be the provision of land for private enterprise house building. The steady supply of land at reasonable prices, in the places where there are demands to be met, is vital to the nation's housing needs. My colleagues and I believe that the Commission has an essential role to play in bringing this about, especially in helping the small- and medium-sized house builders to get the land they need. And we shall aim to operate in this field on a considerable scale.

The Commission does not intend to use crownhold dispositions to any great extent, at any rate until it has been in operation for some time. Crownhold will not, therefore, normally be used for the present. But the Commission has considered situations where its use might be advantageous to all concerned. It seems to the Commission that the opportunities for using concessionary crownhold are limited – indeed for all practical purposes its principal use will be for dispositions to non-profit making organizations such as housing associations, and for other socially desirable charitable purposes. The price below market value at which land will be disposed of under the concessionary crownhold powers has not yet been decided and may vary according to the circumstances.

The Commission believes that the only effective way to reduce the price of building land is to increase the supply of land for building. Its purpose is to ensure that land is put on the market where there is a demand for it, but of course this is conditioned by the totality of our planning system. The arrangements should be such as to ensure that the planning and the development of urban areas, as well as the bringing forward of land for development, will march in step with each other. The Commission will try to achieve this through its land dealing operations as quickly as possible.

The Commission believes that by behaving as a 'National Land Dealing Corporation' under Part II it should be able to loosen up the land market. It will normally wish to dispose of land for development as soon as it has acquired it. On the other hand, the Commission, being commercially realistic, realizes that as it gets into its stride it may be sound commercial sense to buy large areas of land in advance of the immediate demand for its development. But there is no question of buying land just for the sake of owning it.

Where the Commission has bought land in advance of its immediate requirement for development, it will ask private firms to manage it as its agents on a normal professional basis.

The middleman method

I now come to what I believe to be one of the most important parts of this paper. And the part I would like to see most widely discussed by the professions and the technical Press. You will recall that in my earlier remarks, I said that a number of cases under Part III of the Act could be more satisfactorily dealt with under Part II. This comment needs further explanation.

Suppose Mr Vendor has agreed to sell his freehold large Victorian house standing in three acres of land to Mr Developer for £30,000. Under the terms of Part III Mr Vendor cannot know with any certainty for several months after he has signed his contract, what betterment levy he will be asked to pay under Case A. Nor can Mr Developer in all cases be sure whether or how much levy he will have to pay under Case C when he starts development. This uncertainty can be removed. There is nothing to prevent Mr Vendor and Mr Developer asking the Commission, through the appropriate Regional Office, whether the Commission would buy Mr Vendor's property under Part II for £30,000 less a negotiated and agreed amount of betterment levy, and Mr Developer asking the Commission to resell at £30,000. Furthermore, the Commission can agree with Mr Developer that so long as he starts development within two years, he will not be assessed for levy under Case C. Indeed, in certain circumstances, by arrangement with Mr Developer the Commission might be prepared to hold the land until Mr Developer is ready to start development. But if this was part of the bargain, the £30,000 would carry interest until the land was conveyed to Mr Developer. It would be understood that any of the parties would be free to withdraw up to the point at which terms have been agreed.

The Commission refers to this kind of operation as the 'middleman method'. It considers that by using this method of collecting levy there can only be advantage to the three parties concerned (i.e. vendor, developer and the Commission) and in the long run to the development industry as a whole, as I shall explain later.

The 'middleman method', apart from giving certainty at the crucial time in a negotiation, is not likely to be more expensive in fees, – indeed, it could be cheaper to the vendor and purchaser. In order to come in as a 'middleman' the Commission would acquire by a 'general vesting declaration' under section 9 following a voluntarily accepted compulsory purchase order, and 'resell' to the developer. This would not invalidate the vendor's right to take into account professional fees in the settlement of the betterment levy element in the transaction, in accordance with paragraph 19 of Schedule 6. As the developer would receive from the Commission a 'vested' title, the legal work would be small in comparison with a normal conveyancing transaction. The Commission, of course, would have to clear the vendor's title but this need not hold up the 'resale' to the developer. The Land Commission do not pay stamp duty.

I am sure that with the growing confidence in the Commission, the 'middleman method' will increasingly be found to be a sensible way of dealing with levy, at any rate in those cases that arise under Case A.

The advantage to the Commission and in the longer term to the development industry as a whole, is that the levy goes into the Commission's 'Land Trading Fund', and thus helps to build up this fund so that the Commission can help those areas where the high acquisition cost is financially preventing redevelopment.

Local authorities

I do not propose to say much about the Commission and its relationship to local authorities. Just four points need to be made.

First, local authorities have very similar compulsory purchase powers to the Commission and in the normal course of events the Commission would only use its compulsory powers by agreement with the appropriate local authority.

Secondly, local authorities may (indeed the Commission hopes that they will), consider that it is in their interest to invite the Commission to buy and resell to them. This applies more particularly to the smaller authorities who might not have the necessary staff.

Although there will not normally be any direct financial benefit to the local authorities, because the Act requires the Commission to dispose of land for the best price that can reasonably be obtained, unless directed otherwise by the Minister, there may be indirect advantages, for example, where as a result of comprehensive development initiated by the Commission land can be made available to a local authority for development at a lower price than it would otherwise have cost, so long as the purpose is not directly subsidized by the Exchequer.

Thirdly, the Commission can only buy land compulsorily if it is required for material development. It must follow that the Commission must have a very close relationship with the planning authorities. To this extent it can be considered as part of the planning machine.

Fourthly, the Commission is not debarred from putting in a planning application, which will follow the normal course.

Conclusion

This paper has of necessity been long but even so I have not covered all the ground I would have wished; but in conclusion I ask you to note:

First, neither my colleagues nor I became members of the Land Commission for any reason other than because we think its functions can be so administered as to help rather than hinder the orderly and dynamic development of our country. None of us is concerned in political motives or doctrines. We stand outside politics.

Secondly, we believe that the British have over the centuries developed an instinct for finding the right balance between freedom of the individual and the need for a highly industrialized, sophisticated, and crowded country to be sensibly organized.

Thirdly, we believe the Land Commission Act is a measure which historians in the future will judge as one of those strokes of British genius which strikes that balance and which I believe is still envied by thinking people in other free countries.

Trusts: Accumulation

THE appointor in Re Joel's Will Trusts, Rogerson v. Brudenell-Bruce ([1966] 2 All E.R. 482), in exercise of a power of appointment given to him by the trusts of his father's will and by an arrangement under the Variation of Trusts Act 1958, by a deed dated March 28th, 1959, irrevocably appointed a fund to be held on trust for such of his grandchildren as should be living at the expiration of twenty-one years from his death or should prior to the expiration of that period have attained the age of 21 years or married under that age, if more than one in equal shares per capita and not per stirpes. There were five grandchildren living at the date of the appointment. Part of the income had been applied for their maintenance, education and benefit under section 31 (1) of the Trustee Act 1925, and the rest had been accumulated under section 31 (2). Three further grandchildren were born after the date of the appointment.

On the questions raised by a summons taken out by the trustees, Goff, J., held, first, that when a member of the class of grandchildren died under the age of 21 or another potential member was born there was a change of interest of the other members of the class to which the Apportionment Act 1870, section 2, applied, with the consequence that the income of the trust fund ought to be apportioned so that each member enjoyed only that portion attributable to the time when he was alive, and outgoings ought likewise to be apportioned equitably; and, secondly, that in the event of the death of a grandchild before attaining a vested interest, the accumulations of income applying to that grandchild's contingent share in the capital of the fund had to be dealt with by the trustees as directed by section 31 (2) (ii) of the Trustee Act, the investments representing such accumulations of income being added to and thereafter dealt with as part of the entire capital of the fund notwithstanding that a grandchild born subsequently would acquire an interest in capital due to income which arose before he was born.

Hire-purchase: Ownership of Lambs

IN Tucker v. Farm and General Investment Trust Ltd ([1966] 2 All E.R. 508), P., a farmer, entered into a hire-purchase agreement in August 1963 with the defendant company relating to eighty-four ewes. The total hire-purchase price was £647: the initial payment was £120 and the balance was payable in two instalments of £263 10s on June 28th and August 28th, 1964. The ewes were served and lambs born. In April 1964, P. sold the ewes and the lambs to the plaintiff, who was unaware of the hire-purchase agreement. The defendant company seized and sold the ewes and the lambs. It was not in issue that the defendant company was entitled to the ewes.

On appeal from the judgment of the judge of the Tiverton County Court dismissing the plaintiff's action against the defendant for conversion of the lambs, the Court of Appeal, allowing the appeal, held that on a lease of live-stock the progeny belonged to the lessee, unless the lease provided to the contrary, and the position was the same when the transaction was one of hire-purchase; accordingly, the lambs belonged to the plaintiff, who was entitled to damages for their conversion.

Betterment Levy – IX

by K. BUCKLEY EDWARDS

IN last week's article it was said that the basis of assessment under Case F differed according to the category of occurrences ((1), (2) or (3)) giving rise to the assessment. Regulation 3 of and Schedule 1 to the Case F General Regulations 1967 (Case F Regulations) deals with renewals, extensions and variations of a tenancy (category (1)), and provides for each case being treated as the surrender of the existing tenancy and the grant of a new one on the same terms. Levy is then assessed in relation to the grant of the new tenancy as though this were a disposition falling within Case B, subject to three adjustments.

First adjustment

If the tenant had acquired the old tenancy by an assignment for valuable consideration or by the payment of a premium on its grant to him, he might have paid for some development value which would not be reflected in the consideration that he paid for the alteration of the terms of his tenancy. On a subsequent occasion – in particular on an assessment for levy under Case C on beginning to carry out a project of development – the tenant might find himself liable for too much levy because his base value would not reflect the development value he had paid for on his acquisition of the old tenancy. Without any adaptation his base value would only reflect what he had paid on what has to be treated as his last relevant disposition, namely, the transaction which for the purpose of Case F is treated as the grant of the new tenancy.

Accordingly, the amount of any development value paid for on the tenant's acquisition of the old tenancy will be included in the amount determined under paragraphs 1 to 6 of Schedule 1 to the Case F Regulations and added to the amount of the consideration for the grant of the new tenancy, so that on a subsequent chargeable act or event affecting the tenancy it can be taken into account in determining the tenant's Schedule 5 base value. This result is achieved by an adaptation of Regulation 7 of the Betterment Levy (Tenancies and Reversions) Regulations 1967 (Tenancies and Reversions Regulations) made by Regulation 17 (3) of those regulations. The landlord, however, who is treated as the grantor of the new tenancy, has not realized any of the development value on this occasion and, in order to avoid his being subject to levy upon it, a similar sum is added to his base value by paragraph 7 (2) of Schedule 1 to the Case F Regulations.

Second adjustment

The second adjustment derives from the fact that the landlord will either have granted the old tenancy before April 6th, 1967 (as a result of which future rent would have been free from levy), or will have been subject to levy on the grant of the old tenancy on the expectation of receiving rent for the duration of the old tenancy. Regulation 3 (4) (d), with paragraphs 7 (b) and 8 of Schedule 1 to the Case F Regulations, ensure that on the assessment of levy on the grant of the new tenancy, the grantor does not pay levy in respect of the rent which would have been payable during the unexpired part of the old tenancy.

A similar problem arises wherever a tenancy is surrendered without payment of pecuniary consideration. In general this problem is dealt with by Regulation 15 of the Tenancies and Reversions Regulations, which provides for an addition to base value on the assessment of levy on a chargeable act or event subsequent to the surrender affecting the interest of the person who had been landlord under the surrendered tenancy. Paragraphs 7 (b) and 8 of Schedule 1 to the Case F Regulations provide for the ascertainment of a similar sum and for this to be added to base value on the assessment of levy on the alteration of the terms of a tenancy.

Third adjustment

The third adjustment stems from the fact that the interest of the landlord, though treated as being free from the existing tenancy for the purpose of the Case F assessment, is in reality in reversion on that tenancy. Accordingly, if that tenancy was granted after April 6th, 1967, the landlord will already have received credit on the Case B assessment on the grant of the tenancy for part of any development value he may have paid when he acquired the interest out of which he granted the existing tenancy. In order to limit the credit under this head on future assessments of levy to the balance of the development value paid for, Regulation 3 (4) (e) of and paragraph 9 of Schedule 1 to the Case F Regulations attract the provisions of Regulation 8 of the Tenancies and Reversions Regulations, which deals with the Schedule 5 base value of a reversion. The result is to define what for this purpose is 'the amount of the consideration given for the last relevant disposition', and the rules of Case B are then applied under Regulation 3 (4) of the Case F Regulations.

Method of assessment

Where, for the purpose of Case F, it is necessary to find the amount of consideration for a disposition under Case B, the amount to be added depends on which of the following circumstances applies to the last previous disposition of the old tenancy:

- (a) if it was an assignment, the assignment will have been the last relevant disposition within the 'antecedent period' within paragraph 2 (2) of Schedule 5 to the Act, and the amount to be added will be the amount of the consideration for that assignment;

- (b) if it was such an assignment as in (a), above, which took place on or after April 6th, 1967, and was notified to the Commission, the amount to be added will be that part of the consideration for the assignment which represented the development value;
- (c) if it was the grant of the old tenancy which constituted the last disposition of it and it took place in the 'antecedent period', then the amount to be added will be the amount which would be equivalent to the full consideration if the grant had been an assignment;
- (d) if in (c), above, the grant was made on or after April 6th, 1967, the amount to be added will be limited to the element of development value in the consideration for that grant.

Where, for the purposes of Case F, it is necessary to find the base value realized by the disposition under Case B, there is to be added:

- (i) whichever amount is added to the consideration for the grant as calculated under (a), (b), (c) or (d), above; and
- (ii) the amount by which the current use value of the grantor's interest assuming that the old tenancy would run its full course exceeds the current use value of the grantor's interest assuming that the old tenancy had been surrendered.

Paragraph 9 of Schedule 1 to the Case F Regulations contains a special provision for modifying the Schedule 5 base value.

Other categories

Regulation 4 of the Case F Regulations deals with dispositions granting rights over land to Government departments, statutory undertakers, local authorities and other bodies (category (2)). From the point of view of assessment to levy, these dispositions are virtually identical with grants of easements, so that the assessment is made as though the disposition were a chargeable act or event in Case E subject only to some minor changes in definitions.

Regulation 5 of the Case F Regulations deals in a comparable manner with rights to compensation for depreciation of the value of interests in land under the enactments set out in Schedule 2 to the Case F Regulations (category (3)). These enactments comprise the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, the Waterworks Clauses Act 1847, the Electric Lighting Act 1882, the Public Health Act 1936, the Water Act 1945, the Water Resources Act 1963, the Gas Act 1965 and the Compulsory Purchase Act 1965. Dispositions under category (3) are assessed to levy as though they were rights to compensation falling within Case D, subject again to some minor changes in definitions.

Example

Category (1). In 1970 the tenant under an existing tenancy with ten years unexpired at a rent of £200 per annum notified the Commission that the tenancy had been extended by fifty years and had become a tenancy with sixty years unexpired at £500 per annum. The landlord acquired his freehold reversionary interest in 1968 for £5,500. Current use value of the chargeable interest with vacant possession is £2,000.

The method used for assessing levy in the case of dispositions falling within category (2) is to apply the formula used in Case E, taking the compensation paid for the grant of the right as corresponding to the amount of the consideration. The method used for assessing levy in the case of dispositions falling within category (3) is to apply the formula used in Case D, taking as the amount of the compensation that part of the total compensation paid which represents depreciation of the value of the interest in land, excluding any element of compensation for disturbance and other matters.

Credits carried forward

Under the formula used for assessing levy in Cases D and E it is possible for the appropriate deduction to exceed the compensation or consideration, thus giving a negative amount as the figure on which levy could otherwise be charged. This situation arises where more development value was paid for on a previous acquisition than has been taken into account in the Case D or Case E assessment, so that a credit is established under Schedule 11 to the Act. But no such credit can be carried forward on a Case B disposition. The Betterment Levy (Credits from Case F) Regulations 1967 accordingly provide that credits may be carried forward from Case F in categories (2) and (3) which are analogous to Cases E and D, but not in category (1) which is analogous to Case B.

Where a credit can be carried forward under Case F, a Schedule 5 base value cannot be used on a subsequent chargeable act or event. This, again, is because credits arising under Cases D and E (and also Case C) operate to preclude the taking into account subsequently of what would otherwise have been a last relevant disposition for the purposes of a Schedule 5 base value.

Liability for levy

Regulation 6 of the Case F Regulations imposes liability for levy in Case F on the person defined in each case as the grantor, that is, the landlord or the owner of land over which a right is acquired or whose land is depreciated in value. In every case the grantor is the person who realizes the development value. The only person entitled to notify the Commission, under Regulation 7, is the person defined in each case as the grantee, that is, the tenant or the authority which acquires the right or the person liable to pay compensation.

Assessment of levy - all cases

Where the Commission are of opinion that a chargeable act or event has occurred and that levy is or may be chargeable in respect of it or, in the case of a project of material development falling within Case C, that levy may be chargeable in respect of an interest in the land comprised in the project, they may serve a 'notice of assessment' on the person or persons liable to pay it. They may do this whether or not the act or event has been notified to the Commission. The notice of assessment must be served within six years of the date of the chargeable act or event unless the person on whom it is served, or a person acting on his behalf and with his knowledge and consent

- (a) has knowingly or recklessly made a statement which is false in a material particular; or
- (b) has knowingly produced or furnished to the Commission a document which has been wilfully falsified; or, in the case of omission to notify a chargeable act or event or to serve notice of intention to carry out a project of material development, the omission was due to wilful default (section 44).

Where a person prospectively liable to pay levy has died, the notice of assessment of levy will be served on his personal representatives, in which event the notice must be served within three years of the death (Schedule 12, paragraph 5 (1), (2)).

A notice of assessment must:

- (a) indicate the chargeable act or event to which it relates;
- (b) specify the amount of levy payable;
- (c) specify the date on which the levy is charged, which must not be earlier than two months from

How NCR controls

AEC, exporters of heavy commercial vehicles and diesel engines the world over and, of course, famous as builders of London's buses, studied many competitive systems before they finally chose an NCR computer to meet their complex production line needs.

At AEC, more than 90% of the vehicles produced are 'made to measure' to suit customers' individual requirements—all on the same production line.

This situation, in which normal mass production techniques cannot be applied, posed special production problems, and a 'flow line' system has been introduced which depends for its efficiency on a highly complex system of materials control. The transfer of this control to an NCR 315 computer, in conjunction with NCR's CRAM Card Random Access Memory, enables the entire operation to be carried out faster and more efficiently than with the punched card system which it replaced. This provides much closer control of material stocks, and cuts production line shortages and handling costs.

The CRAM Random Access Memory System gives AEC a comprehensive 'state of ordering' file. Any information can be found, processed and re-filed in a fraction of a second. Thus the parts and materials for any job can be ordered well in advance of production needs.

AEC has improved its efficiency through NCR electronic data processing equipment and unrivalled software support. In every type of business, from retail organisations to large manufacturers, from building societies to banks, NCR experience means a smoother ride. Talk electronic data processing systems with NCR today.

C.I.R. v. Carron Company

In the Court of Session - March 10th, 1967

Income tax - Trade - Petition for Royal Charter - Legal expenses incurred - Payments to settle legal proceedings - Whether expenses for purposes of the company's trade - Whether capital or income expenditure - Income Tax Act 1952, section 137 (a), (f).

The respondent company was incorporated by Royal Charter in 1773 to carry on business as an ironfounder. The Charter divided the company's capital into 600 shares of £250 each, placed the share control of the company in a small number of 'voting partners', and limited its borrowing powers to £25,000. None of the voting partners in recent years possessed any qualifications for managing the business on the technical side, and this had to be entrusted to a salaried official who under the Charter could not be a managing director. Thus the company was unable to obtain the services of persons of sufficient calibre for managing a large business in modern conditions. The limit on the borrowing powers forced the company to rely on current resources in order to finance its projects. By 1960 these resources were largely depleted, and the company was having difficulty in meeting its obligations.

In 1946 a person who held one share in the company applied to acquire nine more shares and to be admitted a voting partner, but his application was refused. He then informed the company that he would take every opportunity open to him to attack the voting partners' conduct of the company's affairs, and would endeavour to acquire the nine more shares. There followed a series of litigations in which he obtained the co-operation of a relative who was also a shareholder in the company. The only way to remove the obstacles in the company's constitution was to obtain the grant of a supplementary Charter, but a petition for the grant could not succeed while the litigation was in existence. The company agreed to settle these proceedings by a payment of £41,900 to each of the two persons referred to. The company also incurred legal expenses of £3,107 in ultimately obtaining a supplementary Charter, and incurred further legal expenses of £4,307 in connection with the litigation. By the supplementary Charter the limit on the company's borrowing powers was removed; the capital was divided into 150,000 shares of £1 each; the shareholders' liability was limited; and the management of the business was placed in a standing committee of directors. The company appointed a managing director, with a seat on the board, and also appointed working directors to the board. The results were that the company's trade increased and substantial profits were made.

It was contended for the Inland Revenue that none of this expenditure was an allowable deduction in computing the Case I assessment on the company for 1964-65, in that (i) it was not wholly incurred for the purposes of the business; (ii) it was capital expenditure. It was contended for the company that the expenditure was incurred solely for the purpose of removing obstacles in the way of obtaining adequate finance for the conduct of the business, and to secure the services of qualified persons to manage the business; and that the expenditure was therefore incurred exclusively for the purposes of the business, and was on revenue account. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the company.

Held: the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

Murray v. Imperial Chemical Industries Limited

In the Court of Appeal – April 10th, 1967

(Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS (Lord DENNING), Lord Justice DAVIES and Lord Justice RUSSELL)

In 1947 an agreement was made between Calico Printers' Association (C.P.A.) and I.C.I., whereby in return for royalties the former granted to the latter an exclusive licence to use certain patents which C.P.A. held in a method of producing 'Terylene' polymers. The licence was for twenty years or the duration of the patents, whichever should be the longer period, and I.C.I. was empowered to grant licence rights to third parties. I.C.I. spent much money and effort in developing the invention, and took out a number of ancillary patents of its own. It also established plants for producing 'Terylene' and for manufacturing yarn and fibre therefrom. These measures were barely sufficient to meet the home demand, and I.C.I. was faced with the problem of how to meet the demand from overseas.

It would have required huge capital expenditure to set up plants abroad, and at that time, 1952 to 1953, it was doubtful whether Treasury approval would have been given. I.C.I. adopted, therefore, the alternative method of granting licences to selected foreign companies to manufacture the product under the C.P.A. and the I.C.I. patents. The various agreements were substantially the same. In return for specified royalties I.C.I. granted to the licensee sub-licences under the C.P.A. patent and licences under the I.C.I. patents, and these were for the respective lives of the patents to which they related. The agreements conferred exclusive rights to manufacture, use, import and sell the product. The amount of royalty was based on the net invoice value of all products sold or utilized by the licensee or by any sub-licensee, or imported under any sub-licence granted to any third party. I.C.I. undertook to impart to the licensee all necessary technical information relating to the manufacture and use of the product, which I.C.I. was free to disclose. This involved supplying copies of relevant drawings, technical reports and other data, and allowing responsible members of the licensee's technical staff access to I.C.I.'s plants and laboratories, and giving all facilities and advice so as to enable the licensee to put on the market the best possible saleable products.

In a separate article of the agreement I.C.I. agreed that it would not for ten years give similar information to any other person in the same territory; would require licensees in other territories to maintain the same obligations as to secrecy as the licensee was bound to maintain; and would not itself (nor C.P.A.) manufacture the product in the territory or aid any third party to do so. In consideration of these covenants (the 'keep-out' covenants) the licensee undertook to pay I.C.I. a large sum in six annual instalments.

Another agreement to the same effect, but differing in its layout from the others, was made with two Japanese companies.

I.C.I. accepted that the royalties were taxable receipts but contended that the capital payments for the 'keep-out' covenants were not. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of I.C.I. in respect of the agreements other than the Japanese ones. They decided that half the capital sums in the latter agreements was for 'keep-out' covenants, while the other half was for technical assistance; and that therefore half was a trading receipt and half was not.

Held (affirming the decision of Mr Justice Cross): the Special Commissioners' decisions were correct.

Ricketts v. Scott

In the Court of Appeal – April 5th, 1967

(Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS (Lord DENNING), Lord Justice DAVIES and Lord Justice RUSSELL)

Income tax – Auctioneer and estate agent – Nominee purchaser for undisclosed principal – Proposed acquisition of another site from principal – This site acquired by company for development – Sum paid to taxpayer for withdrawing any claim – Whether non-taxable receipt – Income Tax Act 1952, Schedule D, Case VI.

The appellant, the taxpayer, an auctioneer and estate agent, was employed by a co-operative society in negotiations with the local authority about the transfer to it of a bombed site (the Castle Street site). He was also instructed by another client to dispose of a third site (the Jacey site). The taxpayer offered this third site to the Co-operative Society as an alternative to the Merchant Street site, and in this matter the taxpayer acted as nominee purchaser for the Society. At about the same time the taxpayer suggested to the Society that it should assign the Merchant Street site to him or to a company of his, and a draft agreement to that effect was prepared.

At this point a proposal was received from a property company (Ravenseft). It offered to make up the price payable by the local authority for the Castle Street site to £550,000, and to take a lease of the Merchant Street site on terms acceptable to the local authority. The Jacey site was to be leased to the Co-operative Society. Ravenseft sent a letter to the taxpayer reciting these arrangements and stating that it was understood that he had anticipated obtaining an interest in the Merchant Street site on his own account. In consideration of his withdrawing any claim he might have, and accepting the arrangement with the local authority, and agreeing to execute the necessary documents, the company would pay the taxpayer a sum, which turned out to be £39,000, and a further sum when the Merchant Street site had been developed and let. The taxpayer agreed to these proposals and received a cheque for the £39,000. The Co-operative Society had intimated to Ravenseft that the taxpayer's consent to the proposals should be obtained.

The taxpayer was assessed under Case VI of Schedule D in respect of the £39,000. It was contended for the Revenue that this sum had been received by the taxpayer as a reward for services to Ravenseft. It was contended for the taxpayer that the £39,000 was either a capital receipt or a gratuitous one. The Special Commissioners decided, in favour of the taxpayer, that the £39,000 was a gratuitous receipt, as the Merchant Street site had had no value at the time; and they discharged the assessment.

Held (reversing the judgment of Mr Justice Cross): the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

Winn Industries

POSITIONING as well as the provision of information is an important aspect in the presentation of a company's report and accounts, and the accounts of Winn Industries Ltd provide an opportunity to illustrate this point. The company is an industrial holding organization divided into four divisions – engineering, building materials, packaging and printing, and services.

The report opens with an index of contents followed by the notice of the annual meeting and then by detail of the board, secretary, registered office and so on. The directors' report appears on page 4 and the following three pages contain the chairman's review. The next double opening is the group profit and loss account, in columnar form, but lengthy enough to need two pages.

The following two openings provide the group and parent balance sheets and the next two contain the notes. On page 18 comes the auditors' report and on the following page the names, addresses and activities of subsidiaries by divisions. Not until the final – twentieth – page does the reader reach the real financial detail which, in a group of this kind, is turnover and profit by divisions. This is included in this week's reprint under the heading 'Group turnover and net profit statistics'.

At the front

Surely this is the type of information which should be given at the front of the report and not right at the back. Further than that, the information should be extended to show profits in figures as well as a percentage of 'net profit', which is presumably net pre-tax profit, although the profit and loss account's reference to net profit is a figure after tax and pre-acquisition profits. What net profit actually means in the statistics can only be assumed.

That is the principal reason why profit figures should be given and should be readily reconcilable with the profit and loss account. Percentages are useful to an extent, but decidedly more useful if it is shown to what the percentages refer. The information could also usefully be extended to show assets employed on a divisional basis and the relation of earnings to those assets.

Admittedly in a group such as this, where there are regular additions through acquisitions, it is not easy to chop off the position at the accounting date. In the final month of 1966 there were two additions to the group and, in his annual review, the chairman mentions three further acquisitions in February this year – two being minor operations.

Capital employed

Winn Industries, it will be seen from the reprint, clings to the double-sided balance sheet form and does so without showing a net current assets position. In an industrial organization such as this, in which there is a continual building up of activities by acquisitions, the return on capital employed over the group as a whole, and by divisions, is an essential investment statistic.

That is particularly so when in successive years loan capital has been raised for financing purposes. At the opening of his review the chairman, Mr G. C. Howard, remarks that the company 'bore the full year's interest on £1 million 7½ per cent debenture stock created in 1965, and also the accrued interest on the £500,000 8½ per cent debenture stock issued in 1966'. Taking that into account he considers it 'gratifying' to have finished the year with increased profits 'even though we did not achieve all the advances we had hoped for and for which we had planned'.

Note 1 to the accounts shows that the advance in profits was entirely the result of earnings from new acquisitions. The figure given in Note 1 is a key figure in this type of organization and it should be brought out in the profit and loss account rather than referred to in a note.

Dividend cover

Final net earnings, after tax and pre-acquisition profits, it will be seen, were down from £442,420 to £375,124, and in commenting on the current year outlook the chairman says that the board is 'well aware of the need to increase the dividend cover so as to provide an adequate margin against any increases in taxation that might arise in the future'.

This year 'could reasonably be expected to produce a continued increase in profits'. Rationalization and capital re-equipment are considered to have placed the company 'in a favourable position to take full advantage of the inevitable return to more prosperous times'. In the latter context the chairman detects 'the first glimmer of renewed confidence in forward buying'.

The turnover and net profit statistics at least show the extent to which turnover (including more than doubled inter-company sales) had to be increased last year to achieve the increase in profits, and this year's results may have to depend considerably on further expansion in the building materials division in line with the current improvement in building conditions generally, although most recent acquisitions, it should be noted, have been in the engineering sector of the group.

CITY NOTES

SO far the stock-market has not made a fool of itself over the Common Market moves. When the original negotiations were in progress some five years ago there was a rush of supremely optimistic share buying based on the 'benefits' of Common Market industrial membership, but there is now a much more realistic approach.

In the first place there is the basic difference that application for entry is not being misinterpreted as entry itself. It is also being acknowledged that even if negotiations are successful, entry won't be until 1970 at the earliest.

Apart from this it is appreciated that entry will not bring 'benefits' on the lines so freely – and wrongly – forecast last time. At that time there was still an aura of growth in the equity market and the boom of the late 1950s and early 1960s was only just fading.

But now the prospect of – if not profitless, then not exactly profitable – prosperity has altered the equity atmosphere despite the recovery in the market since the low point of November. Once the Common Market negotiations are under way entry to Europe may become a more telling factor, but against that there is the point that during the negotiations the Government cannot afford to take economic risks in terms of too forceful a reflation of internal demand and a renewal of sterling and payments doubts.

BANK rate having come down another half point, the timing of the next reduction is inevitably a matter for City forecasting. At  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent the rate is still comparatively high in relation to European rates generally, and another good month for the gold and currency reserves could see a reduction to 5 per cent within a matter of weeks. Beyond Bank rate itself, however, there is the matter of easing credit conditions on consumer spending through hire-purchase, the terms of which – with minor exceptions – are still at the crisis pitch of last July. Hire-purchase finance companies would certainly welcome easier terms although not necessarily to a major degree. Reduction in down payment rather than in length of payment term would be a fair initial move.

The building societies will certainly be in the interest 'hot seat' if Bank rate comes down to 5 per cent next month. Lately the Building Societies Association has reaffirmed the movement's intention of holding present rates in order to attract lending funds. This year's figures so far, indicate that the inflow of funds is barely being held at last year's level and with demand for mortgages as strong, if not stronger, than ever, the need to attract funds is paramount. Replacement of the current series of National Savings Certificates by a less attractive issue would be welcomed by the building societies as much as it would be deplored by the National Savings Committee.

THIS month's issue of Barclays Bank Review debates the economy in terms of Government monetary and spending policies. The issue of too high a level of Government spending 'cannot be burked much longer', the Review maintains. If an inflationary boom in an overheated economy is caused by too high a level of Government spending 'it cannot be expected that the cure can be effected by means other than by changes in Government expenditure itself'. A 'squeeze' on the private sector, diminishing profit margins and undermining business confidence does not provide an answer to overheated economy problems. In the context of the present trend towards lower interest rates the bank sees greater emphasis being placed on methods of controlling the availability of credit and less on its price.

Seventy-ninth Annual Meeting

THE seventy-ninth annual meeting of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland was held in the Shelbourne Hotel Ballroom, Dublin, last Saturday. In the unfortunate absence, through illness, of the President, Mr A. S. Boyd, the Vice-President, Mr N. V. Hogan, was in the chair and there were 267 members present.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

The Vice-President read the address prepared by Mr Boyd in the course of which he said:

The Institute suffered a severe loss in August last by the sudden death of our Secretary, Colin Polden. Although he had only been Secretary for some fifteen months he had impressed everyone by the efficient and conscientious manner in which he carried out his duties, and those who had the privilege of knowing him have lost a true friend.

Mr Robin Donovan stepped manfully into the breach in most trying circumstances, and was later appointed Secretary.

Mr Layden – a member of the Institute – was appointed an Assistant Secretary; we welcome him here today.

The year has been a busy one as, apart from the work involved in the implementation of decisions taken over the past year or two, the whole future of the accountancy profession in these islands has been under discussion and review, and these discussions are bound to have some effect on future policy and especially on education and training.

Charter and By-laws

After the enactment of the Charter Amendment Bills which had been lodged in the Private Bills Offices in Dublin and Belfast in May 1965, a special meeting of the Institute was held on August 24th, 1966, and, on a poll, the proposed new by-laws and the participation of the Institute in the schemes for the Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services and the Certificate in Management Information were approved. The new by-laws became operative on November 15th, 1966.

Education and Training

Universities

After the new by-laws became operative, the arrangements with the Irish Universities regarding approved degrees for the purposes of exemption from Parts I, II and III of the Institute examination became effective.

The three Chartered Institutes have agreed in principle for reciprocal recognition of university degrees approved by any one of the Institutes for the purpose of equivalent concessions in the examinations of each Institute.

Research Officer

The decision in principle (announced at the last annual general meeting) to appoint a Research Officer has not yet been implemented pending the results of the discussions on future plans, but the Education and Training Committee with the co-operation of I.B.M. has arranged to make a survey of all students who commenced articles since 1960 to provide comparative statistics which may be helpful in indicating the trend of results for various types of student and the methods of study which they followed.

Examinations

The overall results during the year were very similar to those in the previous year, but cannot yet be regarded as satisfactory.

I would like to thank Mr Harold F. Bell, then Chairman of the Ulster Society, for his generosity in endowing a prize for Part V of the winter session of the Institute examination, and the members of the Ulster Society for endowing prizes for Parts III and IV of the winter session of the examination in commemoration of the Society's Diamond Jubilee.

Conferences and Courses

The fourth Institute Residential Conference was organized by a committee of the Dublin Society and held at Newcastle from October 28th to 30th, 1966. It was a most successful conference, and, as usual, there was probably as useful an exchange of views between and after the sessions as during them.

The courses committee, both southern and northern sections, have been very active and will endeavour to arrange courses on any subjects related to the profession for which there appears to be a demand. The committee would welcome your suggestions.

Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services

I would like to congratulate the six members of the Institute who have accepted honorary awards of the Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services, now that the Institute is a participant in the scheme. They are:

Dr J. F. Dempsey, Dublin,
Mr Alexander Harbinson, Belfast,
Mr George Iliff, London,
Mr Alfred Jones, London,
Mr F. P. Lemass, Dublin,
Mr W. L. McClelland, Dublin.

District Societies

The Council is deeply indebted to the officers and members of the District Societies who organize educational classes for students and act for the Institute in so many ways. We realize the value of their co-operation and I can assure them that their loyalty and hard work is very much appreciated.

No, this is clearly a job for the expert. Now take a similar but less obvious example: when you need life assurance, what should you do? There are hundreds of insurance companies in the United Kingdom, each offering numerous policies. How do you choose from among them all? Again, it's a job for the expert. So consult your insurance broker or your usual

Future Plans

The Council has been very much occupied during the year with the discussions which have been taking place between representatives of the six major accountancy bodies on the future of the profession.

The very wide implications of these discussions will be obvious from the statement which the Council issued in March last.

I must make it clear that no detailed scheme has yet been submitted to your Council, and any scheme which may ultimately emerge would require the approval of the members of each of the bodies concerned before becoming effective.

One of the most pleasing features of these discussions has been the close co-operation between the three Chartered Institutes as evidenced by the matters under discussion, as stated in paragraphs 7 and 8 of the Institute Statement, i.e.

7. A plan for dual or triple membership under which a member of one or other of the three Institutes of Chartered Accountants in Great Britain and Ireland would be eligible to join, if he so wished, either or both of the other two, on paying the appropriate additional annual subscription.

8. The scope for collaboration between the three Institutes of Chartered Accountants, in particular by the establishment of joint committees to consider and deal with a wider range of matters of common interest than has previously been found practicable.

I believe that these matters will now become a reality under any circumstances.

At this point, I would like to pay tribute to the time, energy and thought which our representatives on the Joint Steering Committee and its subcommittees have given on behalf of the Institute. For some months they must indeed have been strangers in their own offices. I refer to Mr Tom Kenny who is a member of Council, and Mr Charles Nicholson who is a partner in Price Waterhouse & Co. It is fortunate that we have men of such stature in London to represent us and, with collaboration between the Institutes likely to grow in future, I am sure we will have to continue to call on the services which they have already so willingly given.

General

The three Chartered Institutes in these islands have joined with the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants in setting up a study group. This can be nothing but beneficial to the members of all Institutes and creates an official contact with our Canadian and American colleagues, just as we already have through U.E.C. in Europe.

As the speed of communications makes the world smaller and brings our colleagues from Europe and the New World more often into contact with us, it is essential that we make every effort to understand their outlook and views on professional thought and practice, and give them the benefit of our own.

The Irish Institute is small in numbers but our views are invited and heard in all matters affecting the profession in these islands. Our qualification is equal, and is accepted as equal, to those of the English and Scottish Institutes.

For the future we must maintain and strengthen that position, and ensure that not only are Irish Chartered Accountants at least as good as any other technically but, even more important, in the realm of integrity and independence.

Legislation

The Taxation and Parliamentary and Law Committees have continued to examine proposed legislation both north and south and, through the Accountants' Joint Parliamentary Committee, the legislation at Westminster.

Recommendations made and action taken are set out in the report and the northern section is very much alive to the possibilities of legislation in Northern Ireland on the lines of the Companies Bill 1966 at Westminster, which unless radically different from the English Bill could in my opinion be harmful to the Northern Ireland economy which is mainly based on the private company.

Ninth International Congress of Accountants

I would remind you all of the Ninth International Congress of Accountants which is to be held in Paris from September 6th to 12th next. Mr Michael Connor, a member of Council, will be rapporteur on a paper entitled 'Important factors in the decision to invest in one country rather than another'. I hope as many members as possible will attend this congress.

Finance

The accounts show a deficit of £2,664 mainly accounted for by what we hope will be a non-recurring expense – the costs of amending the Charter and by-laws. For 1967 there will be some additional income from those who became Fellows under the new by-laws on January 1st, last, but the expenses continue to increase, and must do so if we are to hold our position in the profession and at the same time give a better service to members. Your Council anticipates a loss in 1967, but has decided not to alter the subscriptions until something further is known about future plans, which could affect the situation very materially. Subject to developments it may be necessary to hold a special meeting later in the year to increase the rates of subscription.

Conclusion

I would like to express our thanks to Robin Donovan who has done a remarkably fine job since he undertook the secretarial duties under most trying circumstances in August last. He has had more than his share of problems, but has dealt with them all and came up smiling.

Our thanks to Brice Duffin, our Joint Secretary, and Mr Lynch and Mr Layden our Assistant Secretaries.

My personal thanks to all the members of Council and particularly to Niall Hogan for their unfailing support throughout a busy year.

Changes in the Council membership have been more numerous this year than for many years past. Three members of Council retired, Mr Frank Cleland and Mr Ernest Dawson, both past presidents who had given excellent service to the Institute, and Mr John Bacon who had also given great service to the Institute since he joined the Council in 1955. We thank them for all they have done for the Institute.

To fill these vacancies and increase the number of Council members to twenty, in accordance with the new by-laws, the following members were co-opted:

Mr Niall Crowley, a past Chairman of the Dublin

Society, Mr Don Carroll whose prominence in industry and banking needs no comment from me. Mr Harold F. Bell and Mr Arthur Lovesy, both past Chairmen of the Ulster Society and Mr W. J. Johnston, a past Chairman and Secretary of the Ulster Society Industrial Group.

Towards the end of the year Mr Howard Robinson ceased to practise and automatically retired, but was co-opted a member not in practice.

Two further members retire today under the new by-laws, after long and distinguished service. I refer to Dr J. F. Dempsey and Mr Rollo McClure, a past president, both men of outstanding ability.

In thanking them for what they have done I would like to say how fortunate our Institute has been that men like those who have retired this year, and many like them, have been prepared to freely give so much of their time and energy to the service of the Institute. Long may that spirit of service continue!

ELECTIONS

Election to the Council

The following retiring members were re-elected to the Council: Messrs H. F. Bell, F.C.A. (Portrush); D. S. A. Carroll, F.C.A. (Dublin); R. N. Crawford, F.C.A. (Belfast); Niall Crowley, F.C.A. (Dublin); W. F. Johnston, F.C.A. (Belfast); Thomas Kenney, F.C.A. (London); W. H. O'Donnell, F.C.A. (Limerick); H. W. Robinson, F.C.A. (Dublin); A. W. Warnock, F.C.A. (Dublin).

The following new members were elected: Messrs C. H. Nicholson, F.C.A. (London); A. J. Spain, F.C.A. (Dublin); F. C. Winkelmann, F.C.A. (Dublin).

Election of President and Vice-President

As noted in 'Current Affairs' elsewhere in this issue, Mr Niall Valentine Hogan, B.A., B.COMM., F.C.A. (Dublin), was unanimously elected President for the ensuing year and Mr Thomas Desmond Lorrimer, F.C.A. (Belfast) was unanimously elected Vice-President.

Auditors

The auditors, Mr Harry Hollingsworth Forsyth, F.C.A. (Dublin) and Mr Sydney H. Laughlin, F.C.A. (Belfast) were unanimously re-appointed.

VOTE OF THANKS

At the conclusion of the meeting a vote of thanks to the out-going President was proposed by Mr John Love, F.C.A., who paid tribute to the immense amount of work done by the President not only during his year of office but also in the preceding years as a member of Council. Referring to his outstanding ability, courtesy and consideration of the views of others, Mr Love asked the meeting to express their wish for Mr Boyd's speedy recovery. Mr J. P. MacHale, A.C.A., seconded, and the vote of thanks was carried by prolonged acclamation.

Correspondence

How Vital are Statistics?

SIR, - You have rightly given considerable prominence to views and reviews on the current series of 'Management Information' booklets being published by the General Educational Trust of the Institute. The appearance of this body is of real significance to the accounting profession, the members of which find themselves faced with the alternatives of getting themselves re-educated or watching themselves fall further and further behind their younger colleagues and competitors. Frankly the lack of knowledge of mathematical and statistical method which we accountants demonstrated at a recent course at Eastbourne was alarming. But perhaps we have in the General Educational Trust a hope of salvation. This will only be the case if the Trust will apply itself seriously to the kind of task hinted at in the concluding paragraph of the second leading article in your issue of May 6th - that is to say, if the Trust sets about the task of teaching 'new math' and basic statistics to qualified members of the Institute.

It is asking a great deal of senior members of any profession that they should go back to school in company with the new entrants to the same calling. The Trust has the opportunity of creating a means of re-educating - at least partially analogous with the 'refresher' courses from which the Summer Courses grew - which will avoid this difficulty.

Yours faithfully,
CHRISTOPHER BOSTOCK.

London NW11.

Importance of Articled Clerks

May I say how pleased I was to note in your issue of April 22nd the repeated references to the most important element in the future development of the profession - the articled clerk.

His recruitment to the profession; his training once there; the grants he has available from public funds; his increasing acceptance in the district societies, and so on, all bear testimony to an increasing awareness by the senior part of the profession of the fundamental importance of the junior members of the profession and the encouragement that they must be given to play an increasingly active role in the future development of our profession.

Yours faithfully,
J. M. MIDDLEMAS,
Chairman, National Executive Committee,
UNION OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANT
STUDENTS' SOCIETIES.

Capital Gains Tax: Debts

Mr STRATTON MILLS asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why persons who have lost all or part of the moneys which they have deposited with hire-purchase companies are not able to set off such losses against capital gains tax.

Mr MACDERMOT: Because under paragraph 11 (1), Schedule 7, Finance Act 1965, debts, other than debts on a security, generally speaking, fall outside the scope of the capital gains tax.

Income Tax and Surtax

Mr MAURICE MACMILLAN asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what are the exact personal circumstances and precise conditions that would be met by an individual earning £15,000 per year in order that his effective rate of income and surtax combined be 53 per cent; what proportion of this effective rate is attributable to income tax and surtax, respectively; and what would be the effective rate of income tax, of surtax and of both combined for an individual in exactly the same circumstances earning £5,000, £7,500, £10,000 and £12,500 per year, respectively; (2) on what basis he calculates that the effective rate of tax on a £15,000 a year man is 53 per cent and what would be the effective rate of tax, calculated on the same basis for an individual in similar circumstances earning £5,000, £7,500, £10,000 and £12,500 per year, respectively.

Mr MACDERMOT: The basis for this calculation was a married man with two children under 11 with a total income (wholly earned) of £15,000 a year; and it was assumed that he was entitled to earned income reliefs and the personal allowances appropriate to the personal circumstances stated. At present rates of tax the effective rates asked for are as follows:

Total earned income £	Effective rate of income tax per cent	Effective rate of surtax per cent	Total effective rate of tax per cent
5,000	27.4	—	27.4
7,500	30.5	3.5	34.0
10,000	32.1	8.2	40.3
12,500	33.9	13.3	47.2
15,000	35.1	17.7	52.8

Rolls Razor Ltd: Reports

SIR W. ROBSON BROWN asked the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the report of the inquiry into the affairs and conduct of the Rolls Washing Machine Company.

Mr JAY: The report of the inspectors who inquired into the affairs of Rolls Razor Limited was received on November 30th, 1965. It was referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions under section 169 (1) of the Companies Act 1948. Police inquiries are in progress.

Companies: Profits and Taxation

Mr DRIBERG asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for 1938 and for each year since 1946, total company gross trading profits, total United Kingdom taxes paid by companies, total United Kingdom taxes paid by companies as a percentage of the gross national product at factor cost, and total United Kingdom taxes paid by companies as a percentage of total company gross trading profits.

Mr MACDERMOT: The information is given in the table below:

Accountants' Charges for Work Done in Connection with Claims for Investment Grants

It was reported that following a request made on behalf of the Councils of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland and The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, the Board of Inland Revenue had confirmed that accountants' charges for work done and reports given in connection with claims for investment grants would be treated as deductions in computing claimants' profits for tax purposes.

Selective Employment Payments Act 1966, Audit Verification of Refunds and Premiums

It was reported that information had been received from the Ministry of Labour that although it was expected that straightforward claims for repayment of selective employment tax would be paid within a very few days of submission so that in many cases a claim outstanding at the date of the balance sheet would have been settled at the time of the audit, local offices of the Ministry would be prepared to disclose the amount and the reason for any delay to practising firms acting as auditors, provided that the inquiry is made in writing in suitable form.

University of Bradford

At the invitation of the University of Bradford, the Council appointed Mr G. M. Holroyde, F.C.A., as the Institute's representative to the Court of the University.

The Society of Accountants in Aberdeen

It was reported that a telegram in the following terms had been sent to the President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland on the occasion of the centenary celebrations in Aberdeen on March 20th and 21st, 1967, of The Society of Accountants in Aberdeen:

'On behalf of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales I send you our congratulations and best wishes on the occasion of the centenary of the incorporation by Royal Charter of The Society of Accountants in Aberdeen.

Henry Benson,
President.'

Miss D. M. Vaughan, F.C.A., Secretary of the Association of English Chartered Accountants in Scotland, attended the centenary celebrations as the representative of the Institute.

National Council for Quality and Reliability

It was reported that Mr L. W. Robson, F.C.A., had attended, as the representative of the Institute, the installation on March 17th, 1967, of Lord Kings Norton as the first President of the National Council for Quality and Reliability.

Welsh College of Advanced Technology: University of Wales Institute of Science and Technology, designate

The Council approved under bye-law 68 two courses at the Welsh College of Advanced Technology so that these are now within the scheme operated by the Joint Standing Committee of the Universities and the accountancy profession. These courses are as follows: B.Sc.(Econ.) London - An external degree course of the University of London

B.Sc.(Econ.) Wales - An internal degree course of the University of Wales.

As with other degree courses approved under bye-law 68, accountancy, economics and law are essential subjects within the courses which lead to exemption from the Institute's Intermediate examination.

Approval of both courses is subject to the college becoming a constituent institution of the University of Wales.

Registration of Articles

The Secretary reported the registration of 203 articles of clerkship during March, the total number since January 1st, 1967, being 597.

FINDINGS AND DECISIONS OF THE DISCIPLINARY COMMITTEE

Finding and Decision of the Disciplinary Committee of the Council of the Institute at a hearing held on March 1st, 1967

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that a Fellow of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales was on October 27th, 1966, at General Quarter Sessions convicted upon indictment in that he being an officer of a limited company, the winding up whereof commenced on June 29th, 1964, was in default in that proper books of account were not kept by the said company throughout the period between September 15th, 1962, and the said date of the commencement of the winding up of the said company contrary to section 331 (1) of the Companies Act 1948, so as to render himself liable to be excluded or suspended from membership of the Institute or to be reprimanded or admonished. The Committee found that the formal complaint had been proved but decided that in view of the special circumstances no action be taken.

Findings and Decisions of the Disciplinary Committee of the Council of the Institute at hearings held on April 5th, 1967

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that Nigel Bayliss Cox, an Associate of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, had been guilty of an act or default discreditable to a member of the Institute within the meaning of sub-clause (3) of clause 21 of the supplemental Royal Charter in that he procured the publication in a newspaper of an advertisement seeking business in his capacity as an accountant, so as to render himself liable to be excluded or suspended from membership of the Institute or to be reprimanded or admonished. The Committee found that the formal complaint against Nigel Bayliss Cox, A.C.A., had been proved and the Committee ordered that Nigel Bayliss Cox, A.C.A., of Market Arcade, Fore Street, Kingsbridge, Devon, be reprimanded.

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that William Peter Johnston Scales, an Associate of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, was at a Magistrates Court on January 24th, 1967, convicted of a charge that he did steal £14 in Bank of England notes the moneys of a certain Service Station and was fined £25, so as to render himself liable to be excluded or suspended from membership of the Institute or to be reprimanded or admonished. The Committee found that the formal complaint against William Peter Johnston Scales, A.C.A., had been proved and the Committee ordered that William Peter Johnston Scales, A.C.A., of 2 Porter End, Pyle Hill, Newbury, Berkshire, be excluded from membership of the Institute.

FINDING AND DECISION OF THE APPEAL COMMITTEE

Finding and Decision of the Appeal Committee of the Council of the Institute at a hearing held on April 13th, 1967

The Appeal Committee heard an Appeal against the Finding and Decision of the Disciplinary Committee of the Council of the Institute upon a formal complaint preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council to the Disciplinary Committee that John Shaw Goodare, a Fellow of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, had been guilty of acts or defaults discreditable to a member of the Institute within the meaning of sub-clause (3) of clause 21 of the supplemental Royal Charter in that being the liquidator of a limited company (in voluntary liquidation) he failed within a reasonable time or at all (a) to give any information as to the state and progress of the liquidation repeatedly asked for by the solicitors to three of the creditors of the company and (b) to implement an undertaking he gave to the Institute to ensure that cheques for a dividend in the liquidation were received by all creditors and to dispatch to such creditors a report as to the state and progress of the liquidation, so as to render himself liable to be excluded or suspended from membership of the Institute or to be reprimanded or admonished. The Committee affirmed the Finding of the Disciplinary Committee that the formal complaint against John Shaw Goodare, F.C.A., had been proved under both headings and the Committee affirmed the Decision of the Disciplinary Committee that John Shaw Goodare, F.C.A., of 54 Camp Hill, Birmingham 12, be excluded from membership of the Institute.

THE INSTITUTE OF COSTS AND WORKS ACCOUNTANTS

Data Processing Seminar

A one-day seminar on the practical applications of electronic data processing systems, organized jointly by the Glasgow and District Branch of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants and the University of Strathclyde will be held in the University's Baird Hall of Residence, Sauchiehall Street, Glasgow, on May 24th.

The aim of the conference is to encourage company administrators and managers to make the fullest use of data processing as an aid in modern management.

The functional application of computer systems will be discussed by Mr A. J. McCrae, electronic data processing officer of the Scottish Region of British Rail, Mr E. M. Brodie, M.A., data processing manager for the Scottish Region of I.B.M. (U.K.) Ltd, and Mr N. L. Pledger, B.SC., shipyard manager of Alexander Stephen & Sons Ltd, Glasgow.

Examples will also be given by the above speakers on centralized payroll and data collection, production control in manufacturing industries, and network planning (PERT) in shipbuilding.

The fee for the seminar is £6 6s and applications to attend should be addressed to Mr R. V. Arnfield, of the Industrial Liaison Unit at Strathclyde University, Glasgow.

CITY OF LONDON COLLEGE*Plender Club

A discussion group, known as the Plender Club, has been formed at the City of London College for the purpose of enabling accountancy students to meet at regular intervals to hear the views of eminent speakers on accountancy and related topics. Opportunity will also be given for discussion and questions by the members, and it is hoped that all students of accountancy at this College will take an active part in the meetings.

The first meeting is to take place in the Hall at the City of London College at 5.30 p.m. on May 16th, when the speaker will be Mr A. H. Walton, F.C.A., Chairman of the Education Committee of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales. The subject will be 'Developments in accountancy education'.

BROMLEY AND S.E. LONDON DISCUSSION GROUP

The annual dinner of the Chartered Accountants Bromley and South East London Discussion Group, was held at the New Hackwood Hotel, Widmore Road, on April 21st, with Mr D. H. Kirk, F.C.A., in the chair.

University of Surrey, Mr D. H. Tonkinson, F.C.A., President, and Mr T. T. Nash, F.C.A., Secretary, of the South Eastern Society, and the chairmen of the local associations of bankers, lawyers and estate agents.

The group meets alternatively in Guildford and Dorking, the next meeting being on Wednesday, May 17th, at the Stoke Hotel, Guildford, at 7.45 p.m., with a speaker on the Land Commission Act. The hon. secretary is Mr A. G. Miller, D.F.C., F.C.A., of 2 Sydney Road, Guildford.

NETWORK PLANNING USERS' CONFERENCE

In the light of the rapid spread of network planning techniques through Government departments, industry and commerce, International Computers and Tabulators Ltd has organized a one-day network planning users' conference at the Royal Festival Hall, London, on June 8th to promote the exchange of ideas on the most effective use of network planning methods.

Network planning is a comparatively new management technique. Yet many organizations, large and small, have already benefited from its use in the planning and control of complex projects. With small and simple projects it is possible to calculate time schedules manually. But for larger projects it is more economic to use a computer in view of the vast amount of repetitive clerical work that a manual system would require.

Further particulars concerning the conference are available from the conference administrator, Mr L. Winter, International Computers and Tabulators Ltd, 113 Upper Richmond Road, Putney, London SW15.

This is the first book especially designed and written to assist the cognizant executive in his choice of a computer system – and, through this more efficiently to plan for financial profits.

At the outset it is better to face the fact that management information systems are valuable only as long as they contribute to more effective operations. To help in this direction, the present book is very specific. It may also, in places, be controversial: only challenge can derust the old structures.

Management information systems do not develop the right way just by accident. Wise and profitable machine selection will not come about as a matter of chance. Efficiency with computers – as with any other industrial activity – definitely calls for acts of policy. Albeit, often ones that various persons and departments within the enterprise would greatly resent.

The computer (and the computer industry) has been so far a great international home of hoary myths. The time has come to demystify the whole affair. This calls for courage and for preparation. To that end, the book follows the preparatory phases through clear examples: from systems analysis, to unit runs, file specifications, programming, machine comparisons, computing estimates and the handling of the manufacturer, down to the time of decision.

Selecting the Computer System is designed to particularly appeal to:

- ★ Executives directly responsible for the choice of data processing equipment, and its implementation.
- ★ Senior executives, running operations or functional areas. (They will find in it material of substantial interest to their activities – provided they are determined to go beyond the superficial treatment of the subject.)
- ★ Graduate university students majoring in management, computers and information science.

Users of computer systems urgently need to act in a rational manner, if they are not to become toys in the hands of manufacturers. This is particularly important in 1967 when computers in business, industry and Government have past the embryonic stage. Lately, the men responsible for computer applications have come to realize that they have either to plan completely their systems work or they had better not plan at all.

The objective of the chapters treating the mechanics of the planning work is to answer challenging questions:

- ★ Where to start?
- ★ Whom to believe in following alternative ways and means in the implementation of an electronic system?
- ★ How to keep pace with change?
- ★ How to evaluate the profitability of automatic information handling?
- ★ How to identify and set the limits of cost expansion?
- ★ Where to base the decision on the use of more powerful electronic media?
- ★ How to distinguish facts from fiction?

RECENTLY PUBLISHED*ACCOUNTANTS AND
THE LAW OF NEGLIGENCE*by R. W. V. DICKERSON, B.Com., LL.B., Ph.D., C.A.

A subject of great interest and concern to the accounting profession is the question of accountants' legal responsibility. At the present time no comprehensive volume fully covering the subject is available and this book is designed to fill this gap.

The book discusses in considerable detail the accountant's duty and standard of care, his liability to his clients and to third parties if negligence or fraud is proved. It covers his various responsibilities not only in his capacity as accountant and auditor but also as tax or business adviser, arbitrator and valuer.

A collection of fifty-seven leading Court cases in England, Ireland, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, India and Canada, as well as cases in various States of the United States, are reprinted and arranged to suit the convenience of both accountants and lawyers.

Decisions which are reported in the standard law reports have not been reproduced but quotations more extensive than is usual in a legal textbook have been made from the judgments. In this way, the book is fully usable by those who do not have access to a law library.

Cases which are unreported or which have been reported only in a series of law reports now out of print or less well-known are reproduced in their entirety. For the unreported cases the official transcript of the Court's decision or the trial judge's summation has been used or, where this was impossible to obtain, the report as it appeared in a newspaper or other journal has been reproduced.

The author is a Canadian chartered accountant and lawyer who has practised in Canada as an accountant and later as a lawyer. He obtained a Ph.D. in taxation law at the London School of Economics and returned to Canada to join the Faculty of Law at the University of British Columbia. He is joint author with Professor G. S. A. Wheatcroft and others of Estate and Gift Taxation and has written numerous articles in legal and accounting journals.

His analysis covers, among other subjects, the legal aspects of these major areas:

DUTY OF CARE

Statutory and non-statutory audits
Dangers in unwritten audit contracts

STANDARD OF CARE

Reliance on experts
The audit report:
- ambiguous and misleading reports
- qualifications and disclaimers
- differences in audit of public and private companies
- libellous reports
The audit period:
- interim audit work
- responsibility for post-balance sheet events.

VERIFICATION OF PARTICULAR ITEMS AND TRANSACTIONS

What the Courts have had to say about verification procedures in particular circumstances
The auditor's responsibility for knowing the law, and the audit of a trustee's accounts.

THE MEASURE OF DAMAGES

How damages are assessed against an accountant who has been found negligent
Topics of consequential damages, reliance, remoteness and certainty of damage, prior remedies and mitigation of damages.

LIABILITIES OF THIRD PARTIES

The development of the law in this area on the responsibility of the accountant to persons other than his client.

OTHER DUTIES AND FUNCTIONS OF THE PROFESSIONAL ACCOUNTANT

The accountant's duty of secrecy
The accountant and conflicts of interest
Cases dealing with the legal responsibilities of the accountant when acting as business adviser, tax adviser, arbitrator and valuer.

The handsomely bound 664-page volume, priced at 67s should be in every accountant's office.

DE LA RUE - Assistant Group Taxation Manager

This new position is open to candidates between the ages of 25 and 35 years who have an appropriate professional qualification and experience in the taxation department of an industrial group or firm of accountants. The successful candidate will be mainly concerned with the taxation affairs of the United Kingdom members of a diversified international Group. This senior appointment for a taxation specialist is at the Head Office in London. The salary would, depending on ability and experience, be about £2,000 p.a. with excellent fringe benefits.

Please send brief details, quoting DA. 37, to the Group Personnel Director, The De La Rue Company Limited, De La Rue House, 84/86 Regent Street, London W1

SENIOR ACCOUNTANTS

The professional accountants in those Government departments which have contacts with the industrial and commercial world play an important part in the control of Government expenditure. Their work is varied, covering the full range of financial and cost accounting, together with some applications of management accounting employing up-to-date techniques.

A limited number of appointments is offered to qualified accountants at least 30 and under 45 years of age, whose professional experience is broadly based and who can take on senior responsibilities of complexity that call for initiative and the ability to present and argue a case. Membership of one of the following bodies is essential: Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland, Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants.

Salaries (Inner London) will be on the scale £1,767 to £2,404; for candidates of 35 or over with special qualifications or experience, starting salaries may be above the minimum. There are good promotion prospects to posts with salaries up to £3,010: a number of higher posts carry salaries up to £3,735 and above. Non-contributory pension scheme.

The posts are located mainly in London, Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, Glasgow and Edinburgh.

Fuller details of all the appointments and a booklet outlining the work of accountants in the Government service may be obtained by writing to the Civil Service Commission, 23 Savile Row, London W1, quoting 590/J/1. Closing date June 13th, 1967.

WORKS MANAGEMENT ACCOUNTANT

Following the introduction of new senior management at our specialised cement works at Grays, Essex, a position has been created for a works accountant, preferably with a background in a process industry and fully conversant with modern management accounting techniques.

The likely candidate will be of minimum age 30, and his experience will include purchase and stores accounting routines as well as job costing procedures. He will be directly responsible to the Works Manager with a functional responsibility to the group accounting activity at head office.

Salary will depend on experience, but will be of interest to somebody earning in the region of £2,000 per annum. There is a contributory pension scheme, and annual holiday entitlement is three weeks. Assistance will be given with removal expenses where necessary.

FINANCIAL DIRECTOR

This appointment is with a leading Company manufacturing specialised engineering equipment which is a member of a large National Group. Expansion in recent years has been rapid and potential for further international development is considerable. Future plans make it essential for the Company to appoint a Financial Director with the calibre, experience and drive equal to the opportunities available.

The successful candidate will be responsible to the Managing Director, advising him on financial, commercial and administrative policy. He will also be concerned with human aspects of company management and his executive responsibilities will include all Accounting and Secretarial functions. He will be required to improve and integrate existing control systems to assist in optimising current Company performances and evaluating future strategy and development. He will be a Chartered Accountant, and will have had proved experience as a successful Director or Chief Accountant to a manufacturing company employing modern financial industrial and management accounting techniques.

It is unlikely that anyone earning less than £3,500 p.a. will have the ability, experience and personal characteristics required: the preferred age is between 35 and 45 years.

Salary will be negotiated, a Company pension and life assurance scheme is in operation, and a car will be provided. The Company is located in modern premises in a pleasant area of the East Midlands: if necessary assistance will be given with house purchase.

Applications will be treated in strict confidence. Letters must contain full details of age, education, qualifications, and career and salary progression, and should be sent to Deloitte, Plender, Griffiths & Co. (Ref. X 3), 128 Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.4, who will forward them to the Company.

COST ACCOUNTANT

Required to be responsible to the Management Accountant for the overall supervision of the Cost Department and for the implementation of Standard Costing and Budgetary Control within a new integrated accounting system. He will also be required to contribute to the development of data processing procedures and experience in this field would be an advantage.

This position offers an opportunity for a young qualified Cost Accountant aged between 25/28 years to gain wide experience of Cost Accounting in an expanding Company which is engaged in manufacturing and selling a range of products for use in the Welding Industry. The Company offers the usual fringe benefits and some assistance with housing accommodation may be possible.

Go-ahead life in Zambia

Sun, money, experience are the big assets of a copperbelt job

The job's a challenge. And it has its rewards. This is a real chance to stand on your own feet — and go far. You would work in the Copperbelt with the largest mining group in the world. Anglo American Corporation. The group employs 25,000 people in Zambia and has interests all over the world. It's a lively organisation, intimately involved in the stimulating atmosphere of Zambia.

WHAT YOU GET FROM US

In return for your skill and qualifications you would get a commencing basic salary of not less than £2,000 per annum, with good prospects of promotion. Other benefits include a non-contributory life assurance cover, a 6% special allowance, a 5% Christmas bonus, educational allowances, generous leave conditions and excellent medical facilities. The appointment will be for a contract period of 3 years, subject to renewal, and successful applicants will receive free passages to and from Zambia for themselves and their families, and a terminal gratuity on completion of service. You and your family would lead a healthier life in a gloriously sunny country. Low income tax; low rents; good housing; long holidays and generous allowances; all kinds of social and sporting facilities—these are the big attractions and realities when you join Anglo American. The experience you get on short contract would be useful later, and an appointment could lead to a permanent career with the group.

WHAT WE WANT FROM YOU

You should possess a recognised Secretarial or Accountancy qualification: the qualifications we seek are generally C.A., A.A.C.A., A.C.W.A., or A.C.I.S., but Intermediate or Part-finalists may also be considered. Preference will be given to applicants with the potential to progress rapidly to positions of responsibility. A knowledge of mechanised accounting would be a recommendation as all commercial operations such as Stores Control, Timekeeping, Financial and Cost Accounting are highly mechanised. This service is provided by a centralised IBM 1401/1410 computer complex, which is due to be replaced by a powerful IBM 360/40 256k computer later this year.

NOW WHAT?

Take your first step to a more rewarding life. For an application form and full details of Zambia and AAC WRITE TODAY TO:

APPOINTMENTS

CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Turquand, Youngs & Co. have vacancies in London for qualified accountants who are seeking to broaden their experience.

Staff have ample opportunities to increase their knowledge of advanced techniques whilst engaged on work in a wide variety of industrial and commercial companies. The firm runs its own courses, including instruction in Electronic Data Processing.

There are excellent prospects for promotion and first-class experience can be obtained by those who wish to spend a further two or three years on the practising side before deciding on their future.

Good salaries are paid depending on experience and ability.

Please address applications to Staff Partner, 4 Coleman Street, London EC2.

FOR YOUNG ACCOUNTANTS SEEKING ADVANCEMENT

Cooper Brothers & Co invite applications from young qualified accountants and May finalists for appointments in their offices in London, the Midlands, the North and West Country.

The positions offer opportunities to obtain experience of modern techniques applied to a wide range of professional work including computer auditing. Initially the work will be concerned with auditing, accountancy and taxation but as experience is gained there will be opportunities to take part in investigations or to transfer to one of the specialist departments.

The firm provides formal training under the direction of a full-time training officer.

There will be opportunities to travel abroad on short- or long-term assignments.

AN IMPORTANT NEW BOOK
FOR MANAGEMENT — RECENTLY PUBLISHED

PLANNING FOR PROFITS

by DOUGLAS GARBUTT, A.C.I.S., A.C.W.A.

ANOTHER BOOK
IN THE GEE'S
SERIES

This book presents an unusual combination of sound theory and practical common sense. For every business man, but especially the manager in the smaller firm, it outlines a simple system which can give effective profit planning. With this system, a manager can fix fair and accurate prices, and can decide which orders offer him most profit and which least. Costs can be established and comparisons made which will spotlight inefficiencies. Development of effective, logical and acceptable cost standards can be made to which all members of the firm can conform.

Direct costing overcomes many of the drawbacks of conventional costing systems and the author advocates a system of simple charts which offer a flexible basis for profit-planning.

The author has a remarkable combination of qualifications for writing this book: It is based on first-hand consultancy work which he undertook by virtue of his qualifications as a Cost Accountant and Chartered Secretary.

He is, however, also a lecturer with many years of full- and part-time teaching experience. He has been Acting Technical Officer for the Institute of Cost and Works Accountants and is well known for the many articles which he has contributed to the technical press. Finally, he is a qualified teacher and holds an Academic Diploma in Education.

This book is recommended for the benefit of the business man and manager who is concerned with establishing and maintaining profit objectives for his business. It should also appeal to students who wish to understand the techniques of planning for profits and who are interested in how they can be applied in practice.

Enough?

The percentage of younger people in the population — and therefore in employment — is increasing. This tends to unbalance the usual pension scheme with its bias towards considerations of present wages and salaries.

But a privately administered pension plan can make the all-important provision for investment growth to meet future demands. This is one of the ways in which we plan at Chase Manhattan. Today's pension plan investment is wisely weighted on the basis of future needs.

Why not have a chat with us, let us show you how, in conjunction with an independent consulting actuary, a plan can be prepared to meet your organization's precise requirements. You'll discover just what an advantage it is to have a friend at Chase Manhattan.

Your clients want life
cover and bonuses based on equity investment

now you can recommend a policy backed by the proven record of an established equity portfolio

The W. & G.'s new Equity Policy enables your clients to take advantage of the past performance of the Society's equity portfolio, started in 1954. The table on the right shows the course of the portfolio from inception—and this record is your clients most reliable guide to future prospects. All premiums paid under the policy, and interest earned, are invested solely in the equity portfolio—and, of course, as the law stands, profits are not liable to capital gains tax. At the same time, the life cover given by the policy is absolutely guaranteed, as too are all declared bonuses: so there can be no loss of capital. Two further points of particular interest: control of the complete operation is in the hands of a single, unified management—and the premiums can be paid by monthly Banker's Order, at no extra cost. Looked at either as a method of investing in equities, with lower tax liability and the additional benefit of life cover, or as a means of securing essential life cover with higher than normal bonuses, this policy is bound to prove of considerable interest to your clients. Make sure you have the full facts—contained in our new leaflet—at your fingertips: write now for your copy. Commission of 30/- per £100 sum assured will be paid to accountants, when the first year premium has been received, to cover all costs incurred by them.

A Need of Gratitude

A legacy for the Methodist Homes for the Aged is a means many generous people adopt in expressing gratitude for their own home and for serenity and peace-of-mind in their old age.

There are so many who are less fortunate and for lonely and anxious old people the Methodist Homes for the Aged are a haven and a home. Our constantly growing income from legacies, more than any other factor, has enabled us to embark on the capital expenditure for twenty-five Homes. Unfortunately even these will accommodate only a few of the hundreds of deserving people on the tragically long waiting list.

We thankfully acknowledge this valuable assistance and ask you please to remember the Methodist Homes for the Aged when advising your clients.

BUILDING SOCIETY

Extracts from the Statement by the President, Mr. I. A. D. Maclean presented at the 114th Annual General Meeting on 22nd May, 1967

ASSETS

At 31st January 1967, the Society's assets were £1,073 million, the increase during the year being £145 million. It was in August 1966 that the Halifax became the first building society with assets of £1,000 million. This achievement is one of which our predecessors, who set the Halifax on the path to greatness, might well have been proud. It also gives the lie firmly to those who would have us believe that thrift and self-discipline are no longer among the Nation's virtues.

The gross receipts from investors were £301 million, over £50 million more than in 1965. The net figure, after withdrawals, was £126 million, a highly satisfactory result.

MORTGAGES

This activity in the investment departments enabled the Society to advance on mortgage a record £213 million, an increase of 27% on last year's record. The number of new advances was 77,000, exceeding last year's total by 11,000. The significant feature of these figures is that, despite their record heights, they failed to satisfy in full the demand for mortgages. This fact should serve as a reminder, if one is needed, that vast numbers of people want to own their own homes and are not deterred by economic uncertainties or traditionally high interest rates from seeking to do so.

The Society's experience in early 1967 confirms this. The greater lending capacity brought about by the higher rate of interest paid to investors has been well matched by demand for mortgages, which the Society has been offering at the rate of over £6 million a week.

NATIONAL HOUSING PLAN

Looking further ahead, I consider it essential to keep in mind that the Government have not made any departure from the objective envisaged in the National Housing Plan of 500,000 new houses a year by 1970. The latest forecast for the private sector is just over 200,000 new houses started this year. This is a welcome improvement on earlier forecasts, but clearly a very great effort is needed if the hoped-for figure of 250,000 is to be reached in three years' time. This means that the interest rates adopted by building societies must be realistic enough to attract and maintain the large level of savings and investments which the private sector of housing is going to require in the years ahead.

RESERVES AND LIQUID FUNDS

The Society's reserves at 31st January 1967 were 3.65% of total assets. Liquid funds were 18% of total assets. This high level of liquidity results from the time-lag between the offering of advances and the moment when the money is required.

I do not propose to anticipate the findings of the committee of enquiry into reserves and liquidity which, at the suggestion of the National Board for Prices and Incomes, has been commissioned by the Council of the Building Societies Association. The committee will not need reminding that money invested by the public must be handled with the utmost regard for its security. There is an obligation to maintain a reservoir of liquid funds sufficient to enable a society to preserve a steady level of lending over periods during which there may be considerable fluctuation in the inflow of money.

ADMINISTRATION

The Society's management expenses have increased from 10/10d. to 10/11d. per £100 of mean assets. This compares with the figure of over 12/- per £100 of mean assets which the National Board for Prices and Incomes quoted as the average figure for all societies. It is the Society's experience that the number of transactions on individual accounts tends to increase. It is this factor, as much as the increase in new business as reflected in the assets, which causes pressure on staff and office space.

COMPUTER

This pressure will be eased when the proposed conversion to a computerised system is completed. The computer is due to be installed in June 1967. The process of conversion will then start but it will be a few years before every one of the Society's 180 branches is operating within the computer system. The system planned will preserve to the branch manager the control of individual accounts at his branch.

Finally, I would like to place on record my grateful thanks to the staff, agents and other officials for the work they have done. My grateful thanks are also due to the Board and the members of the Executive for the help and support which they have given me at all times.

Subsidy for Wages

THE reaction of organized industry to the Department of Economic Affairs' proposals for a subsidy of 30s per male worker in manufacturing establishments sited in the development areas was predictable. Both the Confederation of British Industry and the Association of British Chambers of Commerce have, to put it no more strongly, found the proposals unacceptable, although the C.B.I. and, no doubt, the A.B.C.C. as well, are prepared to discuss modifications.

The critics' arguments are cogent. First and most obvious there is the question whether or not this type of subsidy to production would fit in either with GATT or the Treaty of Rome, more especially section 92 of the latter. Second, to link the scheme with the widely criticized Selective Employment Tax is a mistake. There are better methods of taxing services than the SET, while the ill-conceived discrimination against services on pseudo-economic grounds of that impost is not in the best interests of the development areas generally.

Initially to subsidize capital intensive development and then to subsidize labour in the development areas is illogical. Furthermore, the various areas have different problems and widely differing resources which need differing policies.

The most obvious defect of the Ministry's scheme is that it is an open wage subsidy which, in conditions of full employment with the present system of collective bargaining, will merely raise wages. Even if the Government's estimate is right - and the C.B.I. apparently believes it to be wrong - that only 20 per cent of the subsidy will leak into higher wages, the scheme could still do more harm than good.

A good indication of the basic problem inherent in any subsidy is provided by the Scottish Council of the C.B.I. which has suggested that the duration of the scheme should be increased from five to seven years to justify the investment in the regions which the implementation of the proposals would require. At the end of that period no doubt a case would be found for further extension. To make this point is not to quarrel with the desirability of helping the development areas. It is merely to draw attention to the world in which we live, for an ounce of realism is worth a ton of theory.

Labour is the nation's scarcest resource and industry is not likely to use it efficiently if its cost is subsidized. To assert as a basis for the Ministry proposals that at present such labour is not used at all is merely to draw attention to the lack of more positive schemes for the re-deployment of labour.

War on Clean Boot Farmers

WHEN farmers' income tax was transferred from Schedule B to Schedule D for 1949-50 and later years, the draftsman roundly (if incautiously) declared that 'all farming in the United Kingdom shall be treated as the carrying on of a trade or, as the case maybe, of a part of a trade'. This meant, that no matter how dilettante the 'farmer' might be, as long as his operations on his land could be called farming then any loss was available for relief by set-off against his other income. It followed that if he paid the maximum rate of surtax his hobby was practically paid for by the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER.

This idyllic pastoral scene was rudely disturbed in 1960 by section 20 of the Finance Act of that year. Perhaps through a sense of delicacy, the section did not actually mention farming by name. It said that losses (and capital allowances) which would otherwise be available for set-off relief 'by deducting losses of a trade' were no longer to be allowable 'unless it is shown that the trade was being carried on for that year of assessment on a commercial basis and with a view to the realization of profits in the trade or, where the carrying on of the trade formed part of a larger undertaking, in the undertaking as a whole'.

If there is a change in the manner in which a trade is carried on, which takes place in an assessment year or accounting period, then the test for the purpose of the section is applied to the trade as carried on at the end of the year or period. 'Trade' includes 'manufacture, adventure or concern in the nature of trade'. Moreover section 20 applies equally to a profession or vocation and the words 'commercial basis' are to be construed accordingly.

Section 20 was the thin end of the wedge, the thinness of which was shown by subsection (6) which directed that if the trade was being carried on at any time so as to afford a reasonable expectation of profit, then that was to be conclusive evidence that the trade was being carried on with a view to the realization of profits. Clause 21 of the current Finance Bill drives the wedge further.

Clause 21 expressly confines itself to 'a trade of farming or market gardening'. For this purpose it adopts the definitions in section 526 of the Income Tax Act 1952, but extends them to include activities outside the United Kingdom. Section 526 (1) in fact defines 'farm land' as land occupied wholly or mainly for the purposes of husbandry, not being market garden land, and 'farming' is to be construed accordingly. In this roundabout way we come to the fact that if one occupies land wholly or mainly for the purposes of husbandry one is carrying on a trade. But what is 'husbandry'? On this the draftsman is silent, so one must go through the innumerable reported cases on that difficult topic.

Clause 21 (1) deals with individuals who are assessed to income tax; clause 21 (2) deals with companies who are assessed to corporation tax. We will deal with individuals first. Clause 21 (1) says that any loss incurred in the trade of farming or market gardening shall be excluded from section 341 of the Income Tax Act 1952 (the set-off section)

'if in each of the prior five years a loss was incurred in carrying on that trade, and where a loss is so excluded any related capital allowance shall also be excluded from the said section 341'.

'Prior five years' means the last five years of assessment before the loss year.

What is a 'related' capital allowance? This is defined by clause 21 (6) which says that a capital allowance is related to a loss incurred in a trade if it falls to be made in taxing that trade and its basis year is the year of assessment in which the loss was incurred. What does 'basis year' mean? For this one must go back to clause 21 (5) which, however, says that it is to be construed in accordance with section 18 (2) of the Finance Act 1962. This is a long and involved subsection which imports still another section, namely section 325 of the Income Tax Act 1952. It says that where the end of the basis period for a year of assessment falls in, or coincides with the end of, any year of assessment, that year is the basis year for the first-mentioned year of assessment.

Before the new clause can bite, the loss has to be incurred in a trade of farming or market gardening. It would seem that where the taxpayer carries on a single trade which comprises farming and other things as well, such a trade is not within clause 21. This would be a question of fact. If the non-farming part of the trade were very trivial, then no doubt it would be ignored on the de minimis principle. Furthermore, clause 21 (4) prohibits restriction of relief where the carrying on of the trade

(i) forms part of, and

(ii) is ancillary to a larger trading undertaking. The word 'undertaking' is not defined, not even by reference to a string of other sections. But clearly it would cover the cases where the taxpayer carried on a number of separate trades under unified control, provided that the farming was in some way a help to the other trades. Thus the taxpayer has two lines of defence when farming is not his only activity.

Another escape is provided by clause 21 (3) to anyone hardy enough to embark on the task of proving something which depends on two somewhat abstruse hypotheses. He can try to show two things as follows, viz. that

(1) the whole of his farming or market gardening activities in the year next following the prior five years are

(a) of such a nature; and

(b) carried on in such a way as would have justified a reasonable expectation of the realization of profits [sic] in the future if they had been undertaken by a competent farmer or market gardener; but that

(2) if that competent farmer or market gardener had undertaken those activities at the beginning of the prior period of loss he could not reasonably have expected the activities to become profitable [sic] until after the end of the year next following the prior period of loss'.

'Prior period of loss' here means in general the same as the prior five years. However, if losses were incurred in successive years aggregating more than five years ending when the prior five years end, then it means that longer period. The test of whether a loss has been incurred is to be applied by a computation under Case I of Schedule D (clause 21 (7)).

This escape clause puts the whole onus on the claimant of proving the hypothetical facts, and will no doubt involve the employment of expert witnesses familiar with the particular kind of farming carried on.

Still another escape is provided by clause 21 (8) which prohibits restriction of loss relief if the trade was set up and commenced within the prior five years. This is not confined to the actual setting-up and commencement of a genuinely new trade. If, under the Income Tax Acts, an event is treated as equivalent to the permanent discontinuance or setting up of a new trade, then for the purposes of clause 21 (8) also, the trade is to be treated as discontinued and a new trade set up. This does not apply to cases which are within section 61 (2) of the Finance Act 1965 or section 17 of the Finance Act 1954, which negative the notional discontinuance in the case of certain reconstructions where there is no substantial change of ownership.

Again, where the event precipitating the notional discontinuance and new setting-up is 'a change in the persons engaged in carrying on the trade' the clause 21 (8) escape is cut down. It is not available to a person who survives the change. He is dealt with as though the trade were the same trade before and after the discontinuance, as indeed of course it is. Moreover, clause 21 is to apply in such a case as if

(a) a husband and his wife were the same person.

(b) a husband or his wife were the same person as any company of which either the husband or the wife has control, or of which the two of them have control (as defined in Finance Act 1965 (Schedule 18, paragraph 3: "close companies").

It follows that where the husband is a partner in a farming partnership he cannot escape the restriction by the device of retiring from the partnership and being succeeded by his wife, or by a company which the two of them control, to name two of the possibilities. A fortiori he cannot escape clause 21 by taking in a partner or getting rid of him.

Care is taken by clause 21 (10) to prevent the new restrictions from being retrospective. They do not apply to restrict set-off of a loss incurred in a year of assessment before 1967-68, nor the set-off of a capital allowance whose basis year is a pre-1967-68.

The provisions in clause 21 relating to companies follow the same lines as for individuals with due modification for the fact that capital allowances are granted differently, and there are not the same complications about basis periods for assessment purposes. Clause 21 (2) reads:

'Any loss incurred in any accounting period by a company in carrying on a trade of farming or market gardening shall be excluded from section 58 (2) of the Finance Act 1965 (set-off of losses against total profits) if a loss, computed without regard to capital allowances, was incurred in carrying on that trade in that accounting period, and in each of the chargeable periods wholly or partly comprised in the prior five years.'

'Loss computed without regard to capital allowances' is defined in clause 21 (7). Basically one applies Case I rules and does not take into account either capital allowances or charges, notwithstanding section 56 (2) of the Finance Act 1965. 'Chargeable period' means any accounting period or any basis period ending before the company's first accounting period. In this connection 'basis period' is as defined in section 325 of the Income Tax Act 1952.

Clause 21 does not apply to restrict relief in respect of a loss incurred in a company's accounting period beginning before April 1st, 1967.

Current Affairs

Presentation of The Accountant Annual Awards

THE ACCOUNTANT Annual Awards for 1967, for company reports and accounts, were presented at Merchant Taylors' Hall, London EC2, on Thursday of this week by The Rt Hon. the Earl of Cromer, P.C., M.B.E.

The Award for large companies was won by Guest, Keen & Nettlefolds Ltd and Mr Raymond P. Brookes, the chairman, accepted the Award on behalf of the company. The Award in respect of the report and accounts of a smaller company requiring less complex accounts than those of a large group was won by Alenco Ltd, and Mr E. Fawcett, the managing director, received the Award on behalf of the company.

Mr Percy F. Hughes, Editor-in-Chief of The Accountant, presided over the ceremony and referred to the fact that the Awards had been instituted to foster and encourage improvements in financial reporting so that the investing public would have prompt and reliable information – not only that which must by law be supplied, but also that which best modern practice demands. He believed that in the fourteen years since the Awards were first made the improvements had been quite remarkable.

A full report and pictures of the ceremony will appear in next week's issue.

Financial Control Techniques

TWO years ago the National Economic Development Council criticized by implication in its publication Investment Appraisal, the failure of the business community to employ more sophisticated methods of assessing the rate of return on projected capital outlays. The booklet now appears in a revised edition (H.M.S.O., price 2s 3d) incorporating the new rates of tax and capital allowances for both development areas and other regions. Accountants may like to compare, as a study in techniques of exposition, the pamphlet Capital Investment Decisions, written by Mr R. W. Powell, C.A., of the Industrial and Commercial Finance Corporation and available at 2s 6d from that body. It contains the same message with more numerous examples.

If the findings of a small survey summarized by Mr Andrew Robertson in Management and Finance (Hallam Press, price 12s 6d) is any guide, some companies have since taken the N.E.D.C. criticisms to heart. Of the sample of eighty public companies drawn from The Financial Times – Actuaries 500-share index, three-quarters still relied on the accounting rate of return, slightly fewer than depended on that method two years ago. A round dozen companies, as against only three two years ago, now used discounted cash flow but, as the report makes clear, these figures give a rather misleading impression. Most of the companies questioned stated that they employed a number of criteria to determine whether or not an investment should be made. The major factor in this respect was the estimated profit potential and, in assessing this, most of the firms used some type of financial planning covering the next three to five years. It is noteworthy that in making these assessments the use of the computer has increased markedly; five years ago none of the companies surveyed used a computer; now it is 10 per cent.

Modern management techniques stress the importance of clarifying the objective or target. Almost half of the companies questioned stated that they took the future level of profits, while just over a quarter emphasized the prospective rate of growth as the objective. A similar number thought in terms of future sales or in terms of earnings upon capital. To quote the author, 'the outstanding objective for many companies is total profits, with the return on shareholders' capital a poor second and the rest nowhere'.

Libel Award Challenged

A HIGH Court jury's decision that two chartered accountants were libelled in a letter sent by an investment company director to Sir Edwin McAlpine of the building company, and the award of £8,000 damages to the two men, are to be challenged in the Court of Appeal. The decision was referred to in The Accountant of April 29th.

Mr H. Stanley Rubin and the company of which he is a director, B. & R. Investment Finance Ltd, of Deanery Street, London W1, have lodged notice of appeal against the judgment of Mr Justice Swanwick sitting with a jury on April 19th for Mr Norman Harold Davis, of Mildholme, Wembley Park, Middlesex, and Mr Michael Ivor Gee, of Crossfield Road, Hampstead, London NW3, and an award of £4,000 damages to each of them.

Mr Davis and Mr Gee, who practise as Lane

Heywood & Co, at Portland Place, London W1, were also awarded costs of the three-day action.

The jury found for Mr Davis and Mr Gee and assessed the damages after an absence of an hour.

Mr Davis and Mr Gee complained of thirty-one words contained in a letter from Mr Rubin to Sir Edwin McAlpine in December 1964. The defendants denied that the words were defamatory.

Institute's Intermediate Examination

IN the March 1967 Intermediate examination of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, 2,922 candidates sat of whom 1,566 (53.6 per cent) passed.

The First Place in Order of Merit, the Stephens Prize and the Deloitte-Plender Prize for the paper on Auditing, was won by Mr M. K. J. Cheung, of London. The Second Place in Order of Merit, the Flight-Lieutenant Dudley Hewitt, D.F.C. Prize, the Frederick Whinney Prize and the Deloitte-Plender Prize for the paper on Book-keeping and Accounts was won by Mr A. Sen, of London. Third Place in Order of Merit and the Deloitte-Plender Prize for the General Paper was won by Mr G. E. Hill, of Tiverton.

The names of successful candidates are published as a supplement to this issue.

Scottish Institute's Spring Examination

IN Part IV of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland Spring Diet examination a total of 573 candidates sat of whom 306 (53.4 per cent) passed.

The Albert J. Watson Prize was awarded to Mr I. W. Coyle, of Coatbridge, and to Mr W. Hogg, of Aberdeen, for the two most meritorious performances in the examination.

The list of successful candidates appears on other pages in this issue.

Airlines' Liabilities

ON June 1st, the limits of compensation which can be claimed from airlines on behalf of passengers involved in crashes will be raised. This is the date on which Britain's ratification of the Hague Protocol takes effect. At the same time, the Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 1967 comes into force.

The effect of these changes will be that, apart from cases where airlines assume higher limits than those laid down, there will be three main limits and their application will depend almost entirely on the particular flight concerned and the ticketing arrangements. Whether, for instance, a ticket is a single or return may make a difference of as much as £15,000 in the compensation which can be claimed.

Where a flight is governed by the Warsaw Convention, as amended by the Hague Protocol (such as between Britain and other countries which have ratified the protocol), the limit will be £6,000 per passenger.

There are, however, quite a number of countries which have not ratified the protocol (e.g. India, Japan, China, Cyprus). The old limit of £3,000 will apply for a single journey from Britain to one of these countries, and also for a return journey starting and finishing in one of these countries. But the limit for a return journey to one of these countries, starting and finishing in Britain, will be £6,000.

For flights which are not governed by the Warsaw Convention or the Hague Protocol, the new limit will be £21,000. This will apply in the case of domestic flights within Britain or for a direct flight to a country which is not a party to the convention or the protocol, such as Turkey. But compensation for a return flight from London to Istanbul and back will be limited to no more than £6,000.

There will be no change in the agreement which the United States has with the majority of airlines for a limit of $58,000 plus costs, or $75,000 including costs, per passenger for all journeys originating in, terminating in, or with an agreed stopping place in the United States.

In the case of this agreement, the airlines accept absolute liability. Otherwise, the onus of proof is transferred to them, so that to avoid liability they have to prove that all necessary steps to avoid the loss had taken place. Seldom can this be proved, although at the talks taking place to bring about international uniformity in limits the question of absolute liability is being discussed.

Accountancy Education Structure

FOLLOWING representations on the holding of accountancy courses in colleges and institutions of further education made earlier this year by The Association of Lecturers in Accountancy to the Minister of State for Education (The Accountant, February 25th), a policy statement has now been made by the Department of Education and Science.

It has been decided that no new centres of full-time accountancy education are likely to be located other than at polytechnics, but existing centres providing full-time accountancy courses (whether polytechnics or not) will be considered with regard to location of all new courses. In considering the claims of a polytechnic or non-polytechnic to run such accountancy courses, the Department states that the interests of students will be paramount and the strength of the existing centre will clearly be an important factor.

This clarification of policy is in harmony with the views of The Association of Lecturers in Accountancy who were concerned that if only the polytechnics were permitted to provide full-time accountancy courses, there would be fragmentation of specialist teams of accountancy lecturers at the other colleges.

Leasehold Reform Bill

THE Leasehold Reform Bill completed its committee stage on May 11th after sixteen separate sittings of Standing Committee B, and has now been republished as amended (H.M.S.O., price 7s net).

The principal change is that houses within the Bill are no longer restricted by reference to rateable value. The Government have indicated that further amendments will be made at the Report stage. It will be some time before the Bill becomes an Act.

Regina v. Arthur

IN a leading article in our issue of March 25th concerning the Court of Appeal decision in R. v. Arthur we referred to the judgment of Lord Justice Sellers in which his lordship spoke of sums paid by Mr Arthur to Mr Brothers. We are asked to make it plain that the gifts made by Mr Arthur to Mr Brothers were all of a very small nature, the largest individual item being £25, and that there was never anything improper in any payment received by Mr Brothers.

In the penultimate line of the article we referred to 'the Parkes case'; this should, of course, have been to 'the Arthur case'.

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

WHEN our store was built in the latter half of the last century, it conformed to contemporary business thinking in having a 'well' from the ground floor to the dome-like roof of frosted glass. The various selling and administrative sections were grouped on each floor around what was in effect a big central ventilation shaft.

The precise reason for this thinking was obscure when we came to review our chronic shortage of floor space. One school of thought held that it was to allow hot air to ascend from our boiler plant in the winter, thus heating the shivering wretches on the upper floors; by contrast cooling them in summer by giving full play to the usual July cold spells.

Our young maintenance engineer, a product of the present complacent decade, claimed that it was just ignorance on the part of some fossilized old fogey of an architect. As a hot-air expert, we told him, he should know. My own view was that it was a legacy of the penny-pinching of that hard-faced and ruthless era. Less spent on heating, less spent on fans, less in particular spent on cross-girders, flooring and carpets.

The deputy-chairman, whose grandfather had been an early director, scoffed at all of us. A century ago, he loftily explained, the boss used to lean contemplatively over the bulwark, puffing at his churchwarden, watching customers and shop assistants in their movements below.

I remembered his comments one day when I saw him from two floors above leaning against the main stairway banister surveying the thronged aisles around him. He stood at ease, a portly figure redolent of dignity and rectitude.

Just then I chanced to look straight across the hall and perceived a boy leaning over the rail opposite me. He was about twelve, with an expression of mingled excitement and concentration; a happy, alert youngster who would one day be a credit to the community. His gaze was focused downwards and I could see in his outstretched hand a fountain-pen. He was directly above the deputy-chairman.

I was conscious of a sudden surge of pride in the rising generation. Possibly the son of some one-time R.A.F. bomber pilot, bred on tales of unerring precision in the hunt for Bismarck or U-boat, he was boldly endeavouring to hit a target two floors below him with this tiny missile. As indifferent to possible punitive detection as his father had perhaps been to flak or Messerschmidt, as dedicated as a dam-buster, he took unflinching aim.

To shout a warning across to him might have precipitated an unseemly and undesirable scene, tarnishing our public image of respectability besides inflicting on the youngster a traumatic inhibition. To suggest dropping a football boot or a box of chessmen as alternatives (since he was conveniently located in the sports department) was possibly feasible, but the interruption might well have spoiled his concentration. Anyhow he would almost certainly miss at that range. I felt it better to assume that the best would happen, with a trusting optimism not unworthy of our great profession in the stress of alternative strategies, and withdrew out of his sight behind a display-stand of golf umbrellas.

Simultaneously he pressed the button on his fountain-pen. A blue-black blob splashed down squarely on the director's balding head; a moment later his face, upturned in surprise, received the spattering flow of the remaining ink. It was a really excellent effort, considering the environment and the unescapable tension, and the marauder's evasive action was immediate and effective. The deputy chairman's reaction was less restrained than I had hoped, he clearly having no appreciation of the impersonal academic approach to the scientific problem.

That's why we decided to fill in the intermediate floor levels, irrespective of cost, merely as a simple human gesture of top-level policy.

Limited Partnerships

by M. J. GREENER, B.A., F.C.A.

THE Limited Partnership Act of 1907 was passed to enable money to be borrowed, in return for a share of profits, without the lender necessarily becoming fully liable for the debts of his partners. The limited partner, in return for these advantages, must agree not to take any part in the general management, nor may he withdraw without remaining liable for his original investment. He may inspect books and offer advice but the running of the business is in the hands of the general partners and they are free to introduce new members without consultation and may take charge without interference when the firm is wound up.

Unlike a general partnership, this type is not dissolved by events such as death or bankruptcy of the limited partner nor by his charging his share or giving notice. To be effective, the partnership must be registered with the Registrar of Companies and a general partner, taking limited liability, must advertise this fact in the London Gazette.

It was pointed out above that the introduction of this type of partnership could facilitate the raising of business capital by enabling the proprietor to offer the lender more than a fixed interest payment, while at the same time not burdening him with liability for the debts of the firm beyond the amount subscribed. The advantages here are by no means phenomenal. The limited partner, by the fact of being prevented from interfering in management, is merely reduced to the rank of a risk investor. He takes the possibility of a high return should the firm succeed but must accept the fact that he stands to lose his capital should the firm fail, having no priority of repayment nor equality with ordinary creditors. Consequently little attention was paid to the Limited Partnership Act, the more so because it was closely followed by the Companies Acts 1907-1908.

By becoming, then, a member of a limited company the lender retained the benefit of limited liability and share of profits, whilst being also in a position to direct policy through company meetings. What is more, whereas as a limited partner he could not dispose of his interest without retaining liability, in his role of shareholder he could sell part or all of his holding at any time without fear of being asked to contribute later, save for the limited provisions as to the A and B lists of contributories.

Limited partner compared with shareholders

It might be argued that the shareholder has rather less say in management than may be imagined. This is true perhaps in the general instance, but the companies in mind at the moment are by nature small companies – generally family businesses and exempt private companies; this is because the number of partners being limited to twenty a comparable company would have a membership of this region. In this small company it is more common for the members to be closely involved, many being active employees.

Such was the picture until fairly recently. However, certain recent legislative moves have tended to put the comparison in rather a new light and assuming steps are not taken to prevent such manoeuvres, it now seems that the limited company of the family variety may find it more profitable to revert to partnership status of a carefully-phrased kind.

The principal reason for this stems from the recent changes in tax legislation. First, there is the question of corporation tax. All companies are liable for this tax which is at the rate of 40 per cent on profits. Now this in itself is sufficient a deterrent, for the members cannot withdraw profits before tax of 40 per cent has been paid. Had the business been a partnership, then assuming income tax at this level, 40 per cent would still be payable but would be reduced by personal reliefs – particularly earned income relief in the case of working partners. It is taken for granted in both instances that the allowed maximum is drawn as salary. This will, of course, be subject to Schedule E tax and be deducted before arriving at profits.

In addition, however, to corporation tax, distributed dividends will be subject to an additional income tax, this being income not available for earned income relief. It should be noted that the tax cannot be avoided by raising salaries or not distributing profits, as both are effectively controlled. There is a limit placed on directors' fees on the one hand, and surtax directions take care of the other. Partners are, of course, liable to surtax but not to the dividend tax.

Possible qualifications

Two qualifications are necessary here. In the first place the standard rate of income tax is 1.25 more than the corporation tax rate. This means that the liability to income tax will be higher. It will be found, however, that the reliefs will more than compensate for the higher rate of income tax.

Secondly, there is the fact that surtax directions are only made in certain instances. Where 40 per cent or less of the profits are retained, then a direction will not be made. This means the company may avoid dividend tax and surtax on 40 per cent of its profits where the partnership though not paying dividend tax will be liable to surtax. However, rather than assume that this puts the company back into the lead, it might be noted that:

(a) the retention of profits means non-distribution;

- (b) taxed income is better than no income;
- (c) if funds are needed to increase the size of the business, they will probably be for the purchase of capital equipment; rather than make deliberate appropriation of profit to reserve then equipment may be purchased and in many instances will be allowed as a charge against profits for tax purposes by way of wear and tear allowances. This will apply to partnership and company alike;
- (d) the companies with which this article is mainly concerned will probably not be earning profits that attract surtax to any material degree, i.e. the smaller family business.

Profits put to reserve remain there. If not used the return on capital drops. If distributed at a later date they will attract tax. If the business is sold, they will effectively attract capital gains tax.

Thirdly, there is the selective employment tax; assuming the business to be a net payer then all employees of the company will be reckoned in charging this levy. Should all employees be partners and therefore self-employed, then nothing would be payable.

Now assumption of the status of a general partnership might threaten disadvantages that the company was designed to avoid, i.e. it may put control into the hands of too many. This might be avoided by careful phrasing of the agreement, but better still by making the partnership limited, for in the latter instance the one-time, or prospective shareholders, attain limited liability. The one disadvantage is that the effective proprietors, who would have been major shareholders or directors, will have to take unlimited responsibility for debts.

Another factor effecting change of status is the number of persons employed in the business who also are entitled to a share in profits. Suppose there are ten part owners. If only one is actually employed, then one saves little in selective employment tax, but much in dividend tax and vice versa.

Practical example

Consider an example: suppose the persons interested are as follows:

	Share of votes/profits each
Directors or general partners - 2 .. ..	500
Working members or working limited partners - 5 .. ..	40
Members or limited partners - 7 .. ..	10

Suppose profits before tax and before directors' remuneration or partners' shares are £36,000.

If each director takes a salary of, say, £4,000 and the total salaries payable to working members is £5,000, then the position is as follows (assuming no amount held back or put to reserve):

Calculation of profit share assuming all profits are distributed

(Where profits are ploughed back each example will be affected in much the same way. Corporation tax is taken at 40 per cent; income tax at 41.25 per cent. It is assumed that the partnership agreement will provide that salaries will be equal to those paid were the business a company and that profits are shared similarly to the distribution of shares.)

Profit as stated .. .. .	36,000
Less Selective employment tax (three men and four women) .. ..	325
	35,675
Less Salaries .. .. .	13,000
	22,675
Less Corporation tax .. ..	9,070
	13,605
Less Dividend tax .. .. .	5,612
	£7,993

It is assumed that no repayment of selective employment tax is made.

Profits available for distribution: £7,993.

Payments made (net) to each:

	Salaries £	Profits £	Total £
Directors .. .. .	2,350	3,150	5,500
Working members .. ..	588	250	838
Others .. .. .		63	63

If the business were a partnership the profits would be:

	36,000
Less Income tax .. .. .	15,850
	£20,150

Distributed as follows:

	Salaries £	Profits £	Total £	Excess £
General partners	2,350	4,925	7,275	1,775
Other working partners .. ..	588	394	982	154
Others .. .. .		98	98	35

Grossing up the excess figure, it appears that by adopting partnership status the business - or rather the members thereof - would increase gross earnings by £3,021 for general partners, £262 for a working partner with limited liability, and £59 for a non-working limited partner.

Points to remember

These are considerable amounts when related to original earnings, but before drawing hasty conclusions as to the value of changing present status, one or two points should be borne in mind. These may be best shown as follows:

- (1) Suppose 40 per cent of the profits had been retained what difference would this make? The 40 per cent would apply to the figure of £22,675. The profits after corporation tax are £13,605 – these would be reduced by the reserve of £9,070. The tax saving would be £3,741. This reduces the tax paid by the company from £18,806 to £15,065, which is very little less than that paid by the partnership where all profits are distributed. The decision whether or not to form a company must therefore depend on the importance attached to the surtax that the partners will pay over and above any paid by the directors (keeping in mind the points made previously regarding the possibly doubtful benefits of withholding profits).

- (2) The change to partnership status means loss of limited liability to the general partners. This is the penalty for the financial gain. It should be noted, however, that in most normal businesses limited liability has ceased to be so significant inasmuch as penalties against directors in a winding-up can be paralleled with loss in bankruptcy.

The new structure is intended for the family-type concern or any other where one person has a major interest. He is able to retain control without interference by fellow partners. As they cannot dissolve the firm, he also enjoys permanent control and new members can only be introduced with his permission.

Where no major interest exists, an ordinary partnership could be devised with special safeguards written into the agreement to modify powers to dissolve where this is thought necessary.

- (3) A further advantage available to working partners is that the profits withdrawn are available for earned income relief. In the instance of the company this only applies to the salaries.
- (4) There are certain advantages of a rather more nebulous character. A person wishing to organize his estate for duty purposes may prefer a limited partnership where his family have a high share of profit but no control, to a limited company where a large number of shares could mean a decrease in his control. Also it is easier to alter shares in a partnership than transfer shares in a company. There are many legal problems involved here – no more is attempted than to suggest possible advantages.

- (5) It might be suggested that the limited company has security and that members cannot force dissolution as can partners. True, general partners can do this, but not limited partners.
- (6) The greater measure of disclosure demanded under the new Companies Bill in the accounts of companies together with the abolition of the status of exempt private company, can make this type of business organization far less attractive than a partnership that need disclose nothing to the public.
- (7) The example given would seem to hold advantages, partly by reason of avoiding selective employment tax. How would the position alter if the business were such as to entitle it to a premium payment?

Before proceeding it is well to note that the partners can number up to twenty and the greater the number the greater the relief from selective employment tax, and the greater the disadvantage on rebate. In the example given, where the business was a company:

Assumed unadjusted profit	..	..	..	..	36,000
Add Premium	..	..	..	..	98
					<hr/> 36,098
Less Salaries	..	..	..	..	13,000
					<hr/> 23,098
Less Corporation tax	..	..	..	..	9,240
					<hr/> 13,858
Less Dividend tax	..	..	..	..	5,712
					<hr/> £8,146
					£
New profit figure	..	..	..	..	8,146
Old profit figure	..	..	..	..	7,993

Conclusion

This increase still leaves the game to the partnership and in fact makes very little difference. However, the example taken shows a high profit compared to the selective employment tax figure based on a mere seven employees, including four women. What if the number of employees were greater or the profits lower? The advantages gained by the change of status arise from two main sources – avoidance of corporation tax and selective employment tax. There is also the possible increase in earned income relief.

In the first place partnerships are not liable for corporation tax. Change of status will therefore result in a gain, the amount being dependent on the proportion of company income that is distributed as dividend. As far as selective employment tax is concerned, the position is difficult to define. A partnership is limited to twenty persons. The maximum gain is therefore £1,250. The value of this, or any other figure, will depend upon the scale of business.

Where a rebate is involved, the maximum possible is £390. As this will imply a fairly large scale of business, it is probable that the loss will not offset the gain from other directions. However, it may be possible to organize the firm so that the rebate is obtained, i.e. a small number of partners and the other persons guaranteed an annual bonus related to profits. The legal side of this would need to be watched carefully. So far as earned income relief is concerned, the gain depends entirely on the partnership excess profit.

The conclusion to be drawn is surely that where the nature of the business allows, and where the proprietor or, if all be on fairly equal terms, one member of the group agrees to accept general or unlimited liability (this could be backed by guarantees from the others), then from the point of view of tax savings it would appear to be eminently sensible to form a limited partnership rather than a limited company.

Some Problems of Stock Valuation

by P. GUMBRELL, A.C.W.A., A.C.I.S.

NOT only do stocks form an important part of any trading account and costing records, they also provide plenty of room for differences of opinion in valuation. The time-honoured formula, 'lower of cost or market value', is repeatedly quoted without any clear idea being given as to what the terms 'cost' and 'market value' really mean. This is not surprising in view of the vagueness of many professed authorities on the subject which has given rise to a number of disputes heard as tax cases during the past twenty years.

One of the first points which had to be resolved in this way arose in C.I.R. v. Cock Russell & Co Ltd when, in 1949, the tax authorities sought unsuccessfully to establish that all the stock of a company should be valued at cost and again at market price, after which the lower total value should be selected. One of the facts weighing against the Revenue was the evidence that the Commissioners had, in the past, accepted the method which is still generally adopted, namely of taking either the lower of cost or market value for each item of stock and thereby obtaining the most conservative total possible.

Finished stocks

At this stage it is as well to mention that the dictum is generally applied only to finished stocks in a manufacturing company and that work in progress is almost invariably valued at cost. In many instances such work in progress will have no real market value, except possibly for the scrap material content, and whilst it would no doubt make life a lot easier for accountants if work in progress were to be entered at 'no value', there would probably be opposition to such an enterprising approach.

Nevertheless, it has been argued in some special cases that a value of less than cost should be used; when passing judgment in Ostime v. Duple Motor Bodies Ltd, Viscount Simonds mentioned that this might be acceptable in certain circumstances, whilst the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has recommended that the normal basis for stock valuation is its cost, less any part thereof which properly needs to be written off. But all is by no means clear.

Problem of close definition

Leaving aside the various interpretations of market value such as free sale, forced sale and replacement value, and ignoring the intricacies of special trades such as film making, antique dealing, whiskey maturing, tea planting and mining (to name a few), there is still a considerable field of what might be considered to be fairly straightforward manufacturing concerns where direct labour is employed to work on direct materials with fairly chargeable items of expense arising in the process. In such cases, pricing at cost less any part needing to be written off, would seem to be a suitable directive for valuation, always provided that the part (if any) to be written off can be accurately determined. The difficulty arises when a close definition of cost is attempted.

The cost accountant knows that there are many types and kinds of cost. It is not sufficient to say, as the layman does, that something costs what you have paid for it. There are direct costs, production costs, selling costs and administration costs. There are also marginal costs, standard costs (which always seem to crop up in book titles with budgetary control), and historical or actual costs. The layman may fail to see how a cost cannot be actual but if he has ever had a small building job done he will, in all probability, have heard of 'oncosts' and may assume that these are the unreal costs added to the actual ones under the term 'oncost' as a euphemism for profit. This may all be very confusing and the need for a guiding light could well have prompted the Revenue authorities to become involved with the Duple case, as referred to earlier.

'Beyond understanding'

Ostime v. Duple Motor Bodies Ltd was argued in the High Court, the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords, only to be concluded in 1961 with the decision to leave things alone – apparently because the state of affairs was beyond understanding and therefore incapable of being altered. A comment made during the case to the effect that if accountants couldn't agree in their own field, then how could judges decide their differences for them, seems to summarize the position. Viscount Simonds pointed out that before it was possible to settle the case it was necessary to have a precise understanding of what the oncost method consisted, and despite lengthy expert discussion all that emerged was the fact that it differed from the direct cost method; but neither had that method been defined!

Quite apart from arguments over the items to be entered as costs for stock valuation purposes there are differences of opinion as to what particular prices should be used. In stable times this is a nicety of academic interest, but with inflationary trends it becomes one of considerable importance. Thus the relative merits of such systems as last in, first out; first in, first out; standard cost; unit cost; adjusted selling price and average price, are advocated in turn. Even in references to these, however, there is risk of confusion for Terminology of Cost Accountancy, published by The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, mentions no fewer than four variations of the average price, namely, simple average, weighted average, periodic simple average and moving simple average; this last being calculated by reference to a number of periodic simple averages and seems slightly mis-named when described as simple.

These various methods of pricing have not been seriously challenged in the English Courts, perhaps because of the deep waters into which contestants would plunge, compared to which the Duple case complexities would appear as shallow as a children's paddling pool. However, a Canadian company, Anaconda American Brass Ltd, in 1955 was successfully challenged by the Minister of National Revenue in its use of the 'last in, first out' method, whereby it was valuing a substantial quantity of stock each year at 1936 prices, and the rejection of this system of pricing in Canadian law has generally precluded its use in Britain.

It has already been seen that stock valuation complications can be caused by the cost or market value dogma due to differences of opinion as to which charges should make up cost, which method of pricing should be adopted, and in what manner market value should be determined. Also, in connection with disputed stock valuations reference must be made to Patrick v. Broadstone Mills Ltd, which concerned the base stock method.

This method seeks to solve the problem of work in progress by treating it, plus in some cases a basic level of raw materials, as part of the equipment necessary to keep the plant running. The cotton spinning industry is a typical example of this practice and when in 1953 the accounts of Broadstone Mills Ltd were challenged by the tax authorities, they showed fixed stock with other fixed assets in the balance sheet and ascribed to it a valuation dating from the nineteen twenties. The rejection of this approach to stock valuation by the Courts and its close similarity to the 'last in, first out' system as disputed in the Anaconda case, indicates that whatever the differences of interpretation in the 'lower of cost or market value' doctrine, it is clear that these valuations should be related in some way to current prices rather than those of much earlier days.

Special queries

So far the problems mentioned have been mainly those arising from imperfections of definition and the consequent difficulty of deciding, when seeking to apply the doctrine of 'lower of cost or market value', exactly which type of cost or market value should be selected. Reference has been made to the many variations and interpretations of cost and any work on costing will elaborate the details of these, but it is now intended to indicate that even if all the points already mentioned could be settled, special queries would remain in certain industries.

The use of selling prices, less selling costs, for tea and rubber production and in valuing derived by-products of a manufacturing business are noted in the recommendations of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, which also refer to long-term contracts and the means whereby profit on such contracts can be taken in the year in which it is earned. The retail trade is also sometimes quoted as one using a special basis since it is frequently found that many shopkeepers value stock at selling prices and deduct a 'normal' profit ratio.

Another question arises over the depreciation of stock. It is indisputable that stock may at times have to be completely written off because it has become damaged, lost or obsolete, but it is arguable whether a deduction from stock values should be made to provide for these contingencies. Whilst the stock is 'good' it would appear to be a violation of the 'lower of cost or market value' dogma to depreciate its value, but advocates of this additional prudence compare it to a provision for bad debts. This point does not appear to have been tested in the Courts.

Finally, there is the stock valuation of finished goods in a range of qualities to consider. It is indisputable that in costing an item only the effective quantity produced should bear the costs of production. Wastage or scrap is lost and at best any proceeds from its sale are credited to the production costs. Thus, if twelve tons of metal at £10 per ton produces nine one-ton castings and £12 is raised by sale of scrap metal, the material in the castings has a stock value of £120 (i.e.  $12 \times £10$ ) less £12, making £108 or £12 per ton notwithstanding that the metal was originally £10 per ton. Neither this established principle for dealing with waste nor the method in which by-products are separated and valued at selling price less selling expenses will completely satisfy the case where a product is manufactured and marketed in a range of qualities, all derived from a common production unit and having widely differing selling prices.

Yield problem

It is true that with many manufactured items there is only one saleable quality and a series of inspections and tests will ensure that every item meets the market specification which may, in the interests of selling at a competitive figure, include tolerances to a greater or lesser degree. It also happens that with a number of other products, as diversified as building bricks and electronic components, a wide range of qualities can be obtained, each suitable for sale to meet certain requirements and therefore commanding differing prices, although all basically 'costing' the same since they have all been derived from the same production resources. The costing and stock valuation of products having this feature, sometimes termed a yield problem, may be considered in two ways.

First, the entire output regardless of quality may be used to determine the cost of each unit of production, simply by dividing the quantity of units produced into total production costs. This unit cost can then be related to the selling price of each of the qualities produced and the 'lower of cost or selling' used to determine stock values (the Cock Russell case).

Alternatively, in some way account can be taken of the selling price differentials when arriving at the costs. One method is to determine the total production cost and relate this to the total market value of all the units at their appropriate selling prices, so that each unit has the same cost to selling ratio and will therefore give the same profit percentage. In this way there will be no need to write down the lower grade stocks to market value as they will already be below the appropriate selling price unless the entire stock has a production cost which is more than its total market value.

How do the two methods compare? The following figures give merely one example, assuming a four-grade yield:

Grade:	1	2	3	4	Total
Unit selling prices ..	20 0	15 0	12 0	3 0	50 0
Common unit cost ..	10 0	10 0	10 0	10 0	40 0
Stock at lower of cost or selling ..	10 0	10 0	10 0	3 0	33 0

This will give a total stock of 33s with just one item of each grade in stock, but if the alternative method is chosen the stock will be valued at 40s and each item valued at 40/50ths of the selling price, thus:

Stock at cost/selling ratio ..	16 0	12 0	9 7	2 5	40 0

It will rarely happen that the stocks of various grades are in equal proportions, however. With the same prices and costs as above, the following example contains different quantities for each of the grades:

Grade:	1	2	3	4	Total
Quantity ..	4	1	Nil	5	10
Total selling value ..	80 0	15 0	Nil	15 0	110 0
Cost at 10s each ..	40 0	10 0	Nil	50 0	100 0
Stock at lower of cost or selling ..	40 0	10 0	Nil	15 0	65 0
Stock at cost/selling ratio ..	72 9	13 7	Nil	13 7	100 0

In both of these examples the higher grade items have an appreciably higher stock value by relating them to selling prices. This may be argued as violating the doctrine of lower of cost or selling, but the supporters of the system can claim that part of the cost of high grade products is that of the semi-reject or 'fall-out' items. If the five grade-four products in the second example had been totally rejected instead of being selected for low-priced sale, then the grade one and two units would need to be given a cost of 20s each.

Finally, however, it is worth considering one more example, using the same unit prices as before but with still another set of quantities for the different grades:

Grade:	1	2	3	4	Total
Quantity ..	Nil	3	1	6	10
Total selling value ..	Nil	45 0	12 0	18 0	75 0
Cost at 10s each ..	Nil	30 0	10 0	60 0	100 0
Stock at lower of cost or selling ..	Nil	30 0	10 0	18 0	58 0
Stock at cost/selling ratio ..	Nil	22 6	7 6	45 0	75 0

How many accountants would be completely happy with the last line, especially the 45s for a large volume of low-grade items. The answer is bound to be inconclusive, which is probably a good point on which to end.

Betterment Levy – XI

by K. BUCKLEY EDWARDS

LAST week's article dealt in part with the circumstances in which estate duty paid in respect of development value can be deducted from the amount of development value on which levy would otherwise be payable. It also showed the method of calculating the appropriate allowance. Sections 70 and 71, together with Part III of Schedule 7, deal with procedural matters where relief may be applicable.

No allowance may be made under Schedule 7 unless the chargeable owner, or a successor in title of his in whom the chargeable interest has become vested by operation of law (e.g. an executor), has served on the Commission a notice of claim specifying that interest and stating:

- (a) that a named person died on a particular date and that a grant of probate or of letters of administration to his estate was obtained on a particular date at a particular registry;
- (b) that estate duty was leviable on the death of that person; and
- (c) that the deceased was a predecessor of the chargeable owner.

A notice of claim may be served before or after the service of a notice of assessment of levy, but will have no effect if served after an assessment of levy has become an operative assessment.

Where a person (the claimant) serves a notice of claim on the Commission and the Commission are satisfied that the dutiable interest is the chargeable interest and that the death specified in the notice occurred not more than six years before the relevant date, they must apply to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for a certificate under Part III of the schedule and set out the matters stated in the notice of claim and the name and address of the claimant. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue must then issue to the Commission a certificate stating:

- (a) the gross principal value of the dutiable interest for estate duty;
- (b) the method of ascertainment of that value;

- (c) the principal value of the estate of the deceased or of the part which includes the dutiable interest; and

- (d) the effective rate of estate duty.

The certificate is conclusive as to the matters stated in it, except that if the gross principal value of the dutiable interest is not an agreed or determined value of that interest for estate duty purposes, but is an apportioned part of the value of the whole estate, the claimant may challenge the apportionment before the Lands Tribunal. If the Tribunal allows the appeal, it must either discharge the certificate or vary it in such manner as it may determine (Schedule 7, paragraphs 25 to 29).

Certificate of the Commissioners

Where for the purposes of assessing levy an allowance under Schedule 7 is or may be required to be made, but no certificate has been issued by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue under Part III of that schedule, the Commission may serve a notice of assessment of levy which does not take account of that allowance. And where an objection to a notice of assessment of levy is referred to the Lands Tribunal under section 47, the Tribunal must not postpone a decision on that reference by reason only that the notice of assessment does not take account of any allowance, if no certificate has been issued, and must not discharge the notice for that reason. But should the certificate be issued before the Tribunal gives a decision on the reference it must be included among the matters to be considered for the purposes of section 47 (2) (section 70).

It is possible for a notice of assessment of levy to result in an operative assessment of levy before a certificate under Part III of Schedule 7 has been issued by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. Section 71 provides that if the subsequent issue of a certificate makes the amount of levy liable to revision, any person who has paid or is liable to pay levy may at any time before the end of a period of six years beginning with the date of service of the notice of assessment make an application for relief. Where relief is granted the Commission must reduce the levy payable or refund the amount overpaid, as the case may be. Despite section 71, a notice of claim under Schedule 7 must be made before the notice of assessment of levy has resulted in an operative assessment of levy; but this having been done, recourse can be had to section 71 if the assessment of levy becomes an operative assessment before the issue of the certificate.

Capital gains tax

Where land is sold at a greater price than the last time it changed hands the higher figure may be attributable to an increase in development value or an increase in current use value or both. Hitherto capital gains tax has impinged upon the increase in value irrespective of whether it was attributable to increased development value or increased current use value. Under the Finance Bill 1967, which will be referred to later, capital gains tax will be charged upon increased current use value, while betterment levy will be charged upon increased development value.

Schedule 8 to the Land Commission Act deals with deductions from levy in respect of capital gains tax and corporation tax (which, in the case of companies, applies to capital gains) during the transitional period. The schedule applies in three particular cases where levy and capital gains tax might otherwise both be charged on the same increase in value, but only to the first chargeable act or event affecting the land concerned.

The first case where a deduction may arise is where the chargeable act or event constitutes a 'disposal' on which a capital gain accrues to a person, and in respect of that act or event the last relevant disposition fell within the antecedent period from July 1st, 1948, to September 22nd, 1965. Thus, if A buys 'Whiteacre' for £1,000 on January 1st, 1964, and sells it for £3,000 on July 1st, 1967, levy will be chargeable on £2,000, since levy applies to any increase in the value of land over and above its current use value however long that increase in value has been growing, except that where land has been sold between July 1st, 1948, and September 22nd, 1965, or after April 6th, 1967, the purchase price of the land may be taken as the base value, as has previously been seen. Accordingly, if 'Whiteacre' was worth £2,000 on April 6th, 1965, the capital gain of £1,000 accruing since that date would be liable to both betterment levy and capital gains tax.

The second case is where the last disposition took place after the end of the antecedent period but before April 6th, 1967. An example of this would be where A bought 'Whiteacre' for £2,000 on January 1st, 1966, and sold it for £3,000 on July 1st, 1967. In this case A would not be able to use his purchase price of £2,000 as a base value on the assessment of levy, so that he would have to pay levy and capital gains tax on the same increase in value.

Disposal by way of gift

The third case is where before April 6th, 1967, but not more than six years before the relevant date in relation to a chargeable act or event, there was a disposal by way of gift or a disposal on death or a disposal on the termination of a life interest in settled property. An example of this would be where 'Whiteacre' was worth £2,000 on April 6th, 1965, but was valued at £2,500 on January 1st, 1966, when A died, so that there would be a capital gain of £500. If A's executors sell 'Whiteacre' for £3,000 on July 1st, 1967, they will be able to claim an allowance in respect of the tax on the gain of £500 on A's death against any liability to levy.

In some cases there may be a deduction under the first or second case as well as the third case. Thus, if A bought 'Whiteacre' on January 1st, 1964, died on January 1st, 1966, and his executors sold it on July 1st, 1967, there would be a deduction in respect of the capital gains tax chargeable on the death and another deduction in respect of the gains tax chargeable on the sale.

Part III of Schedule 8 contains the provisions for calculating the deduction available under the schedule which, in all three cases, is made from the principal amount of levy payable. As these provisions are transitional and very lengthy they will not be further referred to. The procedure for claiming the deduction is similar to that for claiming the allowance in respect of estate duty under Schedule 7.

Finance Bill 1967

Hitherto, capital gains tax has been calculated by using the actual consideration passing on the disposal or, where that was not a true measure, the market value. Now, where land is concerned, in order to eliminate the betterment which is subject to levy under the Land Commission Act, the basis for computing capital gains and losses in the case of land is to be altered.

Clause 31 of the Bill, with Schedule 4, provides that in computing a chargeable gain or an allowable loss accruing under Part III of the Finance Act 1965, it is to be assumed that the cost of acquisition was equal to the current use value of the land at the time of acquisition, and that the consideration for the disposal was equal to the current use value of the land at the time of disposal. But this does not apply to a disposal if immediately before the disposal the market value of the land (including in the case of a part disposal the land which remains undisposed of) does not exceed the current use value of the land (clause 31(1)). But a person making a disposal may elect that Part III of the 1965 Act shall apply to that disposal as if clause 31 (1) and Schedule 14 were not enacted, and had not affected any prior disposal or other transaction or the apportionment of expenditure on any prior disposal. But the election must be made by notice in writing to the Inspector of Taxes within two years of the disposal, unless this time limit is extended by the Board of Inland Revenue.

Clause 31 (4) declares that a payment of betterment levy is not a sum allowable as a deduction in the computation of a capital gain accruing on the disposal of land or of any other asset. The remainder of clause 31 and Schedule 14 contain further detailed provisions relating to the new method of computing capital gains in the case of disposals of land after April 6th, 1967.

Clause 32 introduces Schedule 15 to the Bill which gives an allowance in respect of betterment levy for purposes of the charge to tax under Case VIII or Case VI of Schedule D and relief in respect of betterment levy from estate duty on gifts inter vivos.

On the abolition of Schedule A, the Finance Act 1963 made provision for the taxation of land and for the assessment of premiums under Case VIII of Schedule D, and in certain cases for assessments under Case VI of Schedule D. Following the passing of the Land Commission Act certain of the provisions relating to the assessment of betterment levy overlap the earlier tax provisions and paragraph 1 of Schedule 15 deals with this situation at length. Where the premium on the grant of a lease is taxed under section 22 (1) of the 1963 Act, the amount of the premium payable to the landlord is to be reduced by the amount of betterment levy charged on the premium and that reduction is to be made before the reduction under section 22 (1) which is dependent on the length of the lease.

Where the premium is payable by instalments and section 22 (6) of the 1963 Act applies, a reduction in the fractional reduction of the premium is to be made in the amount of each instalment, and section 29 (6) (b), which excludes the instalments from taxation as trading receipts, is only to apply to the instalments as so reduced. Similar provisions are to apply where a tenant's obligation to carry out work is treated as a premium under section 22 of the Act.

Where the consideration for a variation or waiver of the terms of a lease is treated as a premium, the principal amount of the betterment levy under Case E or Case F is to be the same as the amount of the premium under section 22 (4) of the 1963 Act, but subject to a proportionate reduction where only part of the consideration is brought into account in assessing the betterment levy, and in the case of Case F subject to such deductions as may be appropriate.

Assignment at less than full value

Where there is an assignment of a lease at less than full value or a sale with a right to reconveyance, so that a sum is taxable under section 23 or 24 of the 1963 Act, the taxable amount is to be reduced by so much of the principal of any betterment levy under Case A charged on the assignment or sale on which the charge to tax arises as is attributable to the taxable amount. Such reduction is to be made before any reduction under section 23 depending on the length of the lease or any reduction under section 24 depending on the time between the sale and a subsequent reconveyance.

Where for the purpose of Part III of the Land Commission Act a notice of assessment of betterment levy results in an operative assessment of levy, it is to become final and conclusive for the purposes of paragraph 1 of Schedule 15, subject to any adjustment under section 54 or 55 of the Act for mistake of fact etc. And where betterment levy is chargeable in respect of land part only of which is the relevant land for the purposes of the charge to tax under Case VIII or Case VI of Schedule D; or where part of the consideration for the disposition is payable to a person other than the grantor under section 36 (3) of the Act, the levy is to be apportioned in such manner as may be appropriate in the circumstances. Any question arising in an appeal against an assessment to tax as to the application of the provisions of paragraph 1 is to be determined on a reference to the Lands Tribunal.

Relief from estate duty

Paragraph 2 of Schedule 15 grants relief in respect of levy where there has been a gift inter vivos and estate duty has become payable. Sub-paragraph (1) deals with property comprised in such a gift which was not settled by the gift. If such property is deemed to pass on death and there is also a chargeable act or event giving rise to an assessment to betterment levy either

- (a) on the donee or his personal representative in respect of the chargeable interest in the gift; or
- (b) on a successor to the donee of the chargeable interest in the gift where the value for estate duty purposes is to be ascertained at a time before the death, the principal value for estate duty is to be reduced by the principal amount of any betterment levy, and this reduction is to be applied before the reduction for gifts made more than two years before the date of death under section 64 of the Finance Act 1960.

Sub-paragraph (2) deals with property which ceased to be settled property under section 38 (8), proviso, or section 38 (12), proviso, of the Finance Act 1957. Both provisos are concerned with a settlement which comes to an end at some time before the death of the donor as respects all or any part of the property settled by the gift. The sub-paragraph also deals with property within section 43 of the Finance Act 1940 which relates to the disposition or determination of life interests within five years of a death. If such property after ceasing to be settled but before the death, is subject to a chargeable act or event so that betterment levy is chargeable on the person taking the settled property or his successor, in respect of the interest in the property when it ceased to be settled property, the principal value for estate duty is to be reduced by the principal amount of the betterment levy. Again that reduction is to be applied before the reduction in respect of gifts made more than two years before the date of death.

As under paragraph 1, where a notice of assessment of levy results in an operative assessment of levy, it is to become final and conclusive for the purposes of paragraph 2 subject to adjustment for a mistake of fact etc. The Board of Inland Revenue may require the Commission to issue a certificate giving particulars of the relevant act or event and of the amount of levy, in which case the certificate will be sufficient evidence of the facts which it states in any proceedings relating to relief under paragraph 2. Where the Commission have been required to give a certificate it will be their duty to inform the Board of any adjustment of the levy which falls to be made. Where betterment levy is chargeable in respect of land only part of which is comprised in the gift, or where two or more persons are jointly or severally liable to pay the levy, the levy is to be apportioned by the Board in such manner as may be appropriate in the circumstances.

MANAGEMENT INFORMATION

Company Profitability Targets

COMPANY earnings, levels of profitability, and the relationship of company profits and investment to the gross national product (G.N.P.) are matters of considerable interest at the present time. This arises not only from considerations of the country's economic well-being, but also in relation to the problems that face management in setting realistic targets for the business that they control. A true appreciation of the problems involved is essential if control of the economy and of the individual company is to be exercised in such a way as to set a rising pattern of prosperity in the future.

A useful appreciation of the problems involved is given by John J. Scanlon in a paper entitled 'How much should a corporation earn?' (Harvard Business Review January-February 1967). At the outset Mr Scanlon poses two fundamental questions: (a) 'What level of earnings is required if U.S. business is to grow and prosper to meet national objectives?' (b) 'What is the best test of corporate earnings adequacy?' Although the discussion of the answers to these two questions is set in the context of the U.S.A. economy, they are particularly relevant to conditions in Britain.

Relationship between corporate profitability and the G.N.P.

The population expansion which is just as relevant in established countries like the U.S.A. and the U.K., as it is to the emerging countries, will face an economy, over the next few decades, with a number of major problems: the expansion of the labour force will require the creation of new jobs; the proportion of elderly and young in the population will grow; and the level of social services is likely to rise. Success or failure in coping with these problems will largely depend upon the efficiency or otherwise with which companies in the private sector are managed; and unless there is a radical change in the balance between public and private sectors, this is likely to continue to be the case.

The profitability of corporate bodies is highly significant for general economic prosperity. Mr Scanlon spells this out quite clearly in the following terms:

- '(1) Economic growth depends upon corporate investment in new plant and equipment.
- '(2) Investment in new plant and equipment depends upon profits.'

He then goes on to trace the close historical relationship between plant and equipment expenditures and the G.N.P. in the U.S.A., over the period 1946-65. This is followed by an examination of the close correlation between corporate earnings and plant and equipment expenditure.

The lesson that is brought out from this examination is that if an economy is to expand to meet not only present commitments, but also increased commitments in the future, there must be a comparable rising trend in capital investment. In turn, this increase in capital investment will only happen if it is supported by a rising trend in the level of profits.

If one accepts that the level of corporate profitability has repercussions far beyond the confines of the individual company, then it is important to know what level of earnings is required from companies if the country as a whole is to achieve its objectives. At company level, management must be able to determine whether the earnings of the company are adequate so that they can set the right criteria for financial planning. What tests can be applied as to the adequacy of company earnings?

Earnings per share (E.P.S.)

One of the criteria commonly used to measure the adequacy of company earnings has been E.P.S.; the reasoning being that an increasing level of E.P.S., is a measure of the company's ability to finance its future operations. In some cases, however, short-term increases in E.P.S., may be quite misleading and it would be well to examine some of the factors which will produce this result.

When a company issues new shares, and this occurs during boom conditions in the stock-market, the market price of the shares will be high in relation to book values of assets. In this situation the company may well tend to invest the proceeds in lower earning projects than it would otherwise have done. In the long run this may result in a decrease in the return on capital employed and a lowering in share values.

The gearing in the capital structure of the company may again give misleading results in terms of E.P.S. Increases in gearing will themselves increase the E.P.S., without increasing the overall level of profitability as measured by the return on capital employed. This distinction between return on capital employed and E.P.S. is often overlooked. Unless there is a much more sophisticated appraisal by investors and analysts of the differences between them E.P.S. can provide a misleading appraisal of the adequacy of earnings.

A further complicating factor in earnings measurement is the treatment of capital investment incentives. This is particularly the case in the U.K. at the present time where a large proportion of the grants and allowances are given in the first year in the life of a new asset. Unless steps are taken to smooth the effect of such accelerated allowances, serious distortions can appear in the after-tax earnings. The lack of a common method of dealing with this is something which should be remedied.

Appropriate corporate earnings

When it allocates the funds of the company to future earning projects, management will usually have regard to a minimum acceptable rate of return, or 'cut-off' rate. This cut-off rate will itself be related to the cost of capital. There are problems, however, in the calculation of this cost.

Usually the calculation of the cost of capital starts with setting out the proportions of the capital employed raised from different sources, e.g. debt, preference shares and equity. The cost of the capital derived from each of the sources is then ascertained and a weighted average cost calculated.

The relative proportions of the capital raised from debt and equity will, however, vary widely between different industries and between companies within each industry. Variations in this proportion will not greatly affect the cost of borrowing money; it will, however, substantially affect the risks attaching to investment in the equity of companies, and help to accentuate difficulties in measuring the cost of equity of funds to the company.

The cost of equity funds cannot be measured by a specified rate in the same way as the cost of borrowed funds. The dividend rate paid on equity shares is not a measure of their cost, as investors look beyond the immediate dividend yield to the underlying earnings. In general the cost of equity funds has been determined by the earnings expectations of investors, as expressed in the price/earnings ratio or earnings yields.

Mr Scanlon seriously questions the use of P/E ratios for measuring the cost of equity funds. P/E ratios are basically a measurement of present earnings against a market price which is based upon investors' assessments of what future earnings are likely to be. Market expectations of rising future income will result in a high P/E ratio for the company's shares. If this is used as the basis for the cost of equity funds, the company will then show a low cost of capital and a low cut-off rate for investments within the business. This means that lower earning projects may be accepted resulting in a frustration of the growth in earnings that was anticipated, with dire long-term implications for the market value of the shares.

The use of stock-market criteria as a measure of the adequacy of a company's earnings may well result in management's attention being focused on short-term market considerations. This can only be to the detriment of management's responsibility for maximizing long-term earnings, and consequently, equity values.

Opportunity costs

The economist's concept of opportunity costs may provide the answer to the whole problem of the adequacy of company earnings. The cost of investing funds in a particular company or project, is the amount that could have been earned on those funds if they had been employed in other uses. The investor is constantly exercising a choice between alternative investments. Where a company is showing lower-than-average earnings, management will have difficulty in raising new equity funds on terms that are equitable to existing shareholders. The task of management in controlling its internal investment policy should not be centred upon covering its existing earnings on equity, but on raising that level until it is comparable with earnings in the rest of industry.

This concept will help in two ways. First, it will help to lift the company's earnings up to the industry level, and in so doing it will move the share price into line with comparable issues to the benefit of the shareholders. Secondly, by providing a reasonably common standard for internal investment right across industry, it will tend to locate resources in those uses where they will be of maximum benefit to the community as a whole.

Reviews

Planning for Profit

by DOUGLAS GARBUTT, A.C.I.S., A.C.W.A.

Gee & Co (Publishers) Ltd, London 30s.

At first sight this is just another book on marginal costing. This might not be any bad thing since it is apparent that both British management and many of their accounting advisers and assistants are taking an alarmingly long time to accept the merits of the marginal concept in the planning of profit and the taking of correct business decisions. But, in fact, within the short space of less than one hundred pages Mr Garbutt has written a book which exposes the reader progressively and inexorably to the marginal argument, and demonstrates how marginalism can be effectively used for the taking of business decisions.

Chapter II in which the theory of direct or marginal costing is stated and developed, making use of a number of different charts, is particularly good from a theoretical standpoint. Chapter III on profit planning immediately introduces the principle of maximizing contribution according to the limiting factor and puts the lesson over well.

In Chapter IV Mr Leslie Bundrey, a window cleaner operating in a wealthy suburb of North London, is introduced in the form of a case study. It might be thought at first that the example is so simplified as to be almost valueless. But by the time this enterprising gentleman has added carpet cleaning and silver polishing to his basic window cleaning activity, the example is coming well to life and it is altogether worth while. Chapter V applies the profit planning principles to an example drawn from a clothing factory and includes specimen forms and again a considerable number of graphical statements. This is very well done and sets out an excellent case study in the course of twenty-five pages.

This is undoubtedly a useful book for quite a wide readership. It is specifically recommended on the cover for the business man and manager who is concerned with establishing and maintaining profit objectives for his business. It is also suggested that it would be appropriate for students.

There is little doubt that many accountants, particularly some who qualified a few years ago, would benefit greatly from an evening spent reading this book, and would be able to pass on this benefit to their clients or employers.

An Introduction to Critical Path Analysis

Second edition, by K. G. LOCKYER, B.Sc., A.M.I.E.E., A.M.I.E.R.E.

Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons Ltd, London. 20s.

Accountants wanting a sound basic working understanding of critical path analysis could not do better than spend a pleasurable day reading this book. It is short, concise and extremely well illustrated. Students working for the Certificate in Management Information will find it very helpful.

First produced in 1964 this is the second edition of a successful book. The latest basic techniques are included, the chapters on loading and on the use of computers are especially useful features.

The application of network analysis has now been extended beyond the manufacturing and construction industries into the planning of commercial and administrative projects. The developing use of C.P.A. in planning and controlling period and year-end company accounting routines bears witness to this trend and an understanding of network principles is increasingly becoming a requisite of accountants in industry.

Auditors seeking a working knowledge of network principles with a view to planning and controlling their work with the aid of C.P.A. and with barrow diagrams will find this book a useful introduction to the subject. Under the heading of 'Latest Time Charts', the author deals with the basic bar and arrow principles, and the reader should have no difficulty in advancing to barrow diagramming on his own.

Finally, cost accountants would do well to consider the author's contention that PERT/cost can be used as a basis for cost control systems. The whole area of C.P.A. and PERT/cost has much to offer accountants, to which this book gives a first-class introduction.

Betterment Levy and the Land Commission

by BRYAN HARRIS, M.A.(OXON.) and W. G. NUTLEY, B.Sc. (EST. MAN.)(LOND.).

Butterworth & Co (Publishers) Ltd, London. £5.

This is the most comprehensive work so far published on the Land Commission Act 1967. Mr Harris is Under-Secretary to the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors under whose auspices the work is published, and both authors are members of the working party of the Chartered Land Societies' Committee which was consulted by the Government during the preparation of the Bill.

The work is essentially practical and is illustrated by copious examples of how levy is to be calculated under Cases A to F. The bulk of the narrative text deals with the betterment levy and is well arranged, with extensive footnotes for the benefit of those who wish to examine the law further. Less space is devoted to the acquisition, management and disposal of land by the Land Commission (as is the case in the Act itself), while crownholds are only briefly referred to—possibly because the Commission does not intend to use crownhold dispositions to any extent at the present time. Rather more space is devoted to temporary and transitional provisions affecting builders and developers and single family dwelling-houses.

Appendices contain a well-annotated copy of the Act, regulations and orders made under the Act and taking effect on April 6th, 1967, and extracts from other Acts and regulations which are referred to in the Land Commission Act and are necessary to a proper understanding of it. The concept of 'material development' is dealt with at length in a separate appendix.

The authors have made a particularly good job of explaining and assimilating into the text the complicated provisions of the many schedules to the Act and regulations made under it. Here and there the law might have been a little more fully stated or explained, but there is no doubt whatever that as regards the basis and method of assessment of levy the authors are on home ground and have rendered a most valuable service. Largely for the benefit of accountants, the work deals with the assimilation of betterment levy with existing taxation, but was published before the Finance Bill 1967.

Resale Price Maintenance

Studies edited by B. S. YAMEY.

Weidenfeld & Nicolson Ltd, London. 50s.

Resale Price Maintenance in Practice

by J. F. PICKERING.

George Allen & Unwin Ltd, London. 35s.

These two books are complementary rather than competing. The work edited by Professor Yamey comprises seven essays in which the operation of resale price maintenance in different countries is discussed, including Canada, the U.S.A., as well as Europe, and which is prefaced by an introductory chapter in which the main economic issues of the problem are discussed. For any specialist in this particular subject, this is a useful reference book.

Dr Pickering's book is more useful for the student and for the person who wants to know how the resale price maintenance issue has reached its present stage. A particularly interesting section is that dealing with the operation of resale price maintenance in the grocery trade. He has some interesting points to make in the use of concealed price cutting by means of trading stamps in countering the growth of resale price maintenance, and finally he reviews the work of the Monopolies Commission and Restrictive Practices Court on this subject.

Ideal buiding

A GRIM report to shareholders in Ideal Building Corporation Ltd ends with the auditors qualifying their report to the extent that the profit and loss account does not necessarily give a true and fair view of 1966 profits. The auditors' report is included in this week's reprint and the auditors refer to the contents of Notes 5 (a) and (b), with 5 (b) itself referring back to Note 1.

Pre-tax profits, it will be seen, were back from £460,744 to £223,135 and the ten-year record shows how, in two years, profits have lost more than was gained over the previous eight despite a substantial growth in net assets. Ideal is basically a housing estate development group. The troubles behind the profit fall have mainly concerned newer parts of the organization.

New Ideal Homesteads, the biggest subsidiary, did well last year under difficult circumstances. But Northern Ideal Homesteads ran into trouble and Mr M. Ellison Rich, the chairman, writes that results showed a sharp deterioration in the first half of last year and, in the third quarter, 'sales and gross income were not reaching targets and expenditure on sites and overheads were substantially exceeding budgets'. An assumption in October that Northern would still show a profit 'proved to be incorrect due to lack of control and inefficient management' and the loss, in fact, proved to be £112,338 after crediting a profit of £99,000 on land sales.

Some kind of order

Investigation, Mr Rich says, revealed that selling prices of properties had been fixed without proper estimate of building and development costs, and production had been allowed to overtake sales. The management of the company was 'completely changed' and 'immediate steps were taken to rectify this serious state of affairs'. Another point was that sixteen bungalows built near Leeds were subject to land settlement and that heavy costs for repair or demolition, or in some cases removal of purchasers to other properties, might have to be borne by the company. A provision of £100,000 has been made against general reserve to cover this contingency, although exact liability is not known.

What applied to Northern Ideal also applied to the Scottish Ideal Homesteads and Ailsa Homes subsidiaries which operated under Northern's direction. Close investigation by senior personnel from New Ideal Homesteads showed that the loss for the year which had been estimated in October at nearly £1 million would be at least twice that figure.

Costs of construction on sites, it was found, bore no relation to original estimates and new managerial staff had to revalue sites from scratch and 'restore some kind of order to the Scottish operations'. Full provisions for the losses in Scotland have been made including the writing off, against general reserve, of £134,800 representing goodwill applicable to Ailsa Homes.

The extent to which Northern and Scottish losses offset profits elsewhere is shown clearly in the profit and loss account.

Over-expansion

The other major trouble spot was a venture into industrialized building. Towards the end of 1964 a method of industrialized building was brought to the group's notice and negotiations on developing the system continued through 1965. In March 1966 a controlling interest was bought in Goole Plastic Homes, a company which held the formula and know-how for the plastic components involved.

Difficulties developed in the following September, however, and these led to a virtual breakdown in the whole project. The chairman says that 'further comment cannot be made on this subject at the present time as the whole matter is in the hands of legal advisers'. Provisions for the loss likely to be incurred, amounting to £123,366, have been made against general reserve.

The sum represents costs and general promotion of the project and research over a period of nearly two years; stocks and materials; payments to staff on dismissal; company formation, and legal expenses. Steps are being taken to recover as much of the loss as possible.

Basically the group's troubles are, as the chairman admits in his review with the accounts, 'the outcome of a policy of over-expansion in previous years'. The group, he comments, 'had neither the financial nor the managerial resources to extend its operations into areas where sufficient control of funds and operations could be exercised'.

Small subsidiaries

The current year will be devoted to reducing operations and losses in Scotland and the North of England thereby releasing funds for acquiring land for development by New Ideal Homesteads. The advisability of retaining some of the small subsidiaries will be appraised.

Management and procedures in housing operations are being rationalized with the object of improving efficiency and reducing overheads 'which are certainly too high'. A start has been made on cutting out small subsidiaries. North End Motors, which operates a motor business at Erith, Kent, is to be closed down over the next few months. Some loss is expected but it will not be substantial.

Another subsidiary at which a hard look is being taken is Agent Engineering, a plant-hire business operating internally within the group. Book value of its plant is £450,000. Results for 1966 showed a loss of £7,010 but the loss on internal hire was a benefit in the hands of the group companies. Furthermore, as Carlton Civil Engineering was closing down, Agent Engineering bore the full depreciation on unused internal civil engineering plant which had not been disposed of by the end of the year.

Consideration is to be given as to whether it is necessary to maintain a plant-hire company within the group on the same scale as in the past.

IDEAL BUILDING CORPORATION LIMITED REPORT OF THE AUDITORS

We have examined the annexed Balance Sheet and obtained all the information and explanations which we considered necessary.
 In our opinion proper books of account have been kept and the Balance Sheet, which is in agreement therewith, complies with the Companies Act, 1948, and gives a true and fair view of the state of the Company's affairs as at 31st December, 1966.
 We have examined the annexed Consolidated Balance Sheet of the Company and its subsidiaries with the audited accounts of those Companies and in our opinion such Consolidated Balance Sheet complies with the Companies Act 1948 and gives a true and fair view of the state of affairs at the 31st December, 1966.
 We have also examined the annexed Consolidated Profit and Loss Account of the Company and its Subsidiaries with the audited accounts of those Companies. Having regard only to the contents of Notes 5 (a) and (b) on page [710] with which we agree, we are unable to report that such Profit and Loss Account, which in all other respects complies with the Companies Act 1948, gives a true and fair view of the profit for the year ended 31st December, 1966.

Better still, you should have a Burroughs 500 System ... whose powerful Master Control Programme would juggle priorities, schedule that rush job, and get it multi-processed immediately, along with the rest of the work in progress.

Long-term changes? Just as simple. Many jobs, for instance, can be added to a Burroughs 500 System which seems—by "one-job-at-a-time" standards—to be fully loaded. When a larger configuration is finally required, the MCP automatically adjusts your work to take full advantage of the added memory, input/output, or peripheral resources.

With a responsive Burroughs 500 System scheduling its own work, maintaining data and programme libraries, and achieving full utilisation through automatic self-management, you're free to concentrate on other important responsibilities. On managing people, for instance. Or perfecting your own brand of responsiveness to your company's constantly changing pattern of information needs.

So if you sometimes get the feeling you should be a magician instead of a DP Manager, remember: there's a better way than "Presto!" It's the new breed of self-managing computers—Burroughs 500 Systems.

There's a Burroughs system for every type of business.

"Item No. 3 – Pensions for senior staff

I think this merits our serious consideration. High taxation makes it difficult to reward our senior people adequately, but we can make additional provision for them through the Norwich Union 10% Pension Plan With Profits. Nowadays after tax and other deductions, net salary allows little for saving. This plan could be the answer, and I recommend we study the details".

The Norwich Union 10% Pension Plan With Profits for salaried directors, executive and senior staff possesses valuable advantages:—

1. Guaranteed units of £100 p.a. pension on retirement, or £1,000 cash on earlier death.
2. Both these benefits are enhanced by yearly compound bonuses.
3. 25% of pension commutable for tax-free cash on retirement.
4. Individual or group arrangements.
5. The company's payments are regarded as an expense of management, and not as income of the employee for tax purposes.

Remember—there's more than one way to reward the work and loyalty of your staff. Look to their future by providing the larger benefits accruing from the bonus-earning potential of the Norwich Union 10% Pension Plan With Profits. ## CITY NOTES

IF there could be a more depressing background to the stock-market than the present combination of political and economic pressures it is probably best not to try to imagine it. Far East and Middle East troubles and the economy showing signs of wasting can hardly be calculated to inspire investment confidence.

Add the latest degree of American escalation in Vietnam for good measure and only the hardened professionals in the stock-market dare operate and then only on the shortest of short-terms. The professionals stay on the take-over path in the hope that, whatever else happens, take-overs and mergers will carry on and it looks very much as though they will.

Take-over dealing and switching from nationalized steel shares elsewhere in the equity market has helped to protect equities as a whole from the worst effects of political and economic factors, but the steel switching factor is now wearing a bit thin and is likely to become threadbare before long.

Hopes of a midsummer move towards easier conditions in terms of capital, if not consumer spending are beginning to look remote.

MOVES by the Association of Unit Trust Managers to tighten up the Association's rules and regulations failed to win the City notice that they deserved. The necessity, in future, of member managements to submit all advertising matter to the Association and the condition that agents must be members of recognized professional bodies are two particular points which should, and will, offer investors an even squarer deal. The advertising point may seem to have come a little late in the day, but a by-product of it will be to make it clear to investors which management groups are members of the Association and which are not. The 'Association Approved' stamp on advertising will have some significance and those management groups outside the Association may, as a result, feel more inclined to join.

ONE of the most important aspects of this year's meeting of the International Monetary Fund will be the state of tension in the international tug-of-war on international currency liquidity supervised by 'The Group of Ten'. This usually silent but spasmodically verbose body may, by September, have made some progress on this subject which, in essence, is an attempt to provide a neutral yet viable base for international currency settlements outside the existing reserve currencies, and outside gold. Success by September would certainly help Britain's Common Market case. It would also be a considerable surprise.

DURING a period in which industrial company profit and dividend statements have, in the majority, been nothing to write home about, figures from the leading brewery groups have been a remarkable exception. Last autumn most brewery company chairmen commented critically on the Government clamp-down on prices and on the imposition of SET. These two factors, combined with rising costs and a rising level of unemployment and part-time working in key areas were expected to pinch profits. But, with business doing something more than just hold up, the brewers, thanks to the economies stemming from heavy capital investment, have been able to show a rising earnings level. By this worth-while performance and increased efficiency they have pleased their shareholders and the stock-market. Whether they have helped their case for higher beer prices is another matter.

Investment Grants in Accounts

SIR, - I was extremely interested to read the article 'Investment Grants and their Treatment in Accounts', by Idris Hicks and P. S. Manley in your issue of May 6th, but I feel that their conclusion that these grants should be treated as non-distributable capital receipts must not go unchallenged.

The least convincing part of their argument must surely be contained in the sentence 'Moreover, the practice (of treating grants as distributable) would offend against one of the avowed intentions of the revised scheme of taxation of companies - the encouragement of the retention of earnings'.

I find the very notion that the interests of shareholders and of national economic policy are necessarily best served by retaining profits rather than returning them to their owners for them to make their own decisions to be highly questionable - but equally deplorable is the meek acceptance of the view that the Government need only make known its wishes for everyone to have to do as they are told. If the Chancellor intends these grants to be non-distributable, then he has only to include the appropriate clause in the Finance Bill - but until he does that (and Parliament accepts it), I find no good reason whatsoever for doing what I am told!

From the technical aspect, investment grants are not all that different in principle from the former investment allowances. They come from the Board of Trade rather than the Inland Revenue, and they come in the form of cash rather than as a remission of tax - but are they so very different in other respects? I find nothing objectionable in crediting them to an equalization account and bringing them to the credit of revenue over an appropriate period of years - if the directors so decide. But surely the most important point of all is to disclose quite clearly how they have been treated in the accounts - whichever method has been chosen.

Yours faithfully,
DESMOND GOCH, F.A.C.C.A.

How Vital are Statistics?

SIR, - The opening sentence of the article under the above heading in The Accountant of May 6th informs its readers that statistics are not included in the Institute's examinations. I find it rather surprising that such an important subject is still excluded from a chartered accountant's training, especially in view of the need for accountants to be fully trained in the wider branches of accountancy which, in these days, should surely include statistical methods.

May I say that The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants has had a paper on statistics in its examinations for over thirty years. When I sat my finals in 1935, I well remember struggling with terms such as 'deviation from the norm' or 'correlation of the coefficient' and quite a lot of it stuck!

Yours faithfully,

Value Passing Out of Shares

SIR, - Your contributor in his article 'Value passing out of shares' in your issue of May 13th, places much emphasis on the personal control situation. But in the example he gives of enfranchisement of non-voting shares, is control by one person essential to create a possible capital gains tax liability?

Section 22 calls for the inclusion in a disposal of assets of 'capital sums received in return for forfeiture or surrender of rights . . .' and, in the case of a gift or a bargain not at arm's length, for consideration deemed to be equal to the market value of the asset.

Could it not be argued that enfranchisement of non-voting shares is a surrender of rights by the voting shareholders and as such means a part disposal; with the added danger, if the consideration is inadequate, of any resultant liability to capital gains tax falling on the donors, i.e. the original holders of the voting shares?

Yours truly,
AN INQUIRER.

[Our contributor writes: The article in question deals in particular with paragraph 15 (2) of Schedule 7 to the Finance Act 1965, which reads:

'If a person having control of a company exercises his control so that value passes out of shares in the company owned by him or a person with whom he is connected, or out of rights over the company exercisable by him or by a person with whom he is connected, and passes into other shares in or rights over the company, that shall be a disposal of the shares or rights out of which the value passes by the person by whom they were owned or exercisable.'

This sub-paragraph only applies where a person has control of a company and exercises the control in a particular way; and the main purpose of the article was to draw attention to the fact that paragraph 15 (2) can apply where a person controls a company and exercises that control in such a way that shares in the company are issued to some other person at par when they are worth more than par or when value passes out of rights over the company such as voting rights.

Paragraph 15 (2) does not say at all, nor does the article, that control by one person is essential to create a possible capital gains tax liability, but control is necessary for the application of paragraph 15 (2). The word 'person' in paragraph 15 (2) is not confined to a single person. By reason of the Interpretation Act 1889 it can include more than one person or a company.]

Audit scope

SIR, - Now that the question of the scope of an auditor's functions and, indeed, the possibility of a 'management audit' are being considered in various quarters, it might be interesting to look at an example set in a distant foreign country. I enclose a copy [reproduced below] of a recent auditor's report with the identifying references deleted. It is interesting to speculate on the reaction in this country if an auditor's functions were regarded as covering the matters touched on in this report. The somewhat Latin emotional content of the document is perhaps rather foreign to our profession and as a director myself I would be reluctant to have my dynamism assessed by the auditors.

Yours faithfully,

Enfield.

H. NORRIS.

To the Stockholders of the

.....

Gentlemen:

I am pleased to inform you that in fulfilment of my legal and statutory functions, I have verified that the operations carried out during the year of 1966 and registered in the books of the Corporation are in accordance with all relevant regulations.

A revision of the vouchers, securities and accounts show a very considerable progress in the work of the Corporation, whose profits during said exercise are the highest achieved to this date, since they reach an approximate sum of £..... In the same manner, the reserves registered as of December 31st, and those which will originate from the distribution of profits will be .....

I feel obliged to mention that such extraordinary results are due to the dynamic and successful guidance of the Directors and to the efficient management of the President, ..... and his collaborators.

The operations were made and developed with utmost care. Furthermore, there is no doubt as to the permanent interest and concern displayed at all times by those in charge of the transactions.

The General Balance at December 31st, 1966, and the Statement of Income presented to your consideration and approved by the Banking Superintendency, have been taken from the accounting books. They show the results of the operations carried out during the year in question, and reflect the soundness of the Corporation.

Accordingly, I respectfully propose that you give your approval to the General Balance of the Corporation at December 31st, 1966, and to the Statement of Income for the year between January 1st and December 31st, 1966, as presented by the Board of Directors.

Having finished today another period of my term as Statutory Auditor, I wish to express my most sincere gratitude to the General Assembly, which elects this position, for the confidence displayed in me during all these years since the foundation of the Institution. During this time I have tried to correspond, acting always with loyalty and enthusiasm.

Sincerely yours,

Statutory Auditor.

The Chartered Accountants' Benevolent Association

Eighty-first Annual General Meeting

THE eighty-first annual general meeting of The Chartered Accountants' Benevolent Association was held on May 10th, following the Institute's annual meeting. Sir William Carrington, F.C.A., President of the Association, was in the chair, and about ninety members were present.

President's Address

In the course of his address, Sir William said:

The annual report and accounts constitute a factual record of the proceedings of the Benevolent Association for the past year. There are two or three matters, however, to which I would like to refer before formally moving the reception and adoption of the report.

The recent increase in National Assistance grants has indicated the need to examine and, I think, to increase the basis of our grants so that our beneficiaries may have a reasonable standard of living and we are presently engaged upon such review.

Further, as stated in the report, we have acquired three additional places to the Homes of Crossways Trust, and the Secretary would be glad to hear of any member, or the wife or widow of any member of the Institute who would like to be considered for these places.

Lastly, I would call attention to our ability to acquire nomination rights to housing units through the Hanover Housing Association, which is doing a fine job of work under the aegis of the National Corporation for the Care of Old People in providing housing for the elderly throughout the United Kingdom. Details will be found on page 28 of the annual report.

May I now formally move the reception and adoption of the report and accounts and I will ask Sir Henry Benson to second my proposal.

Sir Henry Benson: I second the proposal.

The Chairman: The meeting is now open for discussion and questions in regard to the annual report and accounts. We shall be proceeding in a moment to the special meeting and we will then consider and deal with the alterations of the rules. (A pause.) If there are no questions, may I put the motion to the meeting? Those in favour? Those against? That is carried unanimously. Thank you.

The next business is to appoint auditors for the year 1967-68 and to fix their remuneration.

Mr R. E. Warlow: I have much pleasure in proposing that Mr Bernard William Rivett and Mr James Mansfield Keith be reappointed auditors for the year 1967-68 at a fee of 300 guineas.

A Member: I second the resolution.

The Chairman: Thank you. May I put that to the meeting? Those in favour? Thank you. May I take this opportunity of thanking the auditors for their work. This is largely a matter of love. If all their assignments were remunerated on this basis, I am afraid they would be qualifying as beneficiaries. (Laughter.) I do thank them very much indeed for their services.

That part of our proceedings now concluded I will now pass, if I may, to the special meeting.

SPECIAL MEETING

The purpose of this meeting is to consider and, I hope, adopt the new rules. All changes of any substance have been interpolated in the circulated document containing the proposed new rules. These new rules are required for four reasons:

First, an oral promise was made some years ago that provision would be made for life members of the Incorporated Accountants' Benevolent Fund, the assets and liabilities of which were taken over by the Benevolent Association in 1962, to become life members of this Association. Rule 3 (d) redeems this promise.

Secondly, under the present Rule 13 (a), the Board of Governors has power to expend up to £10,000 in acquiring places in Crossways Trust's homes for old people. Due to further acquisitions, to which I referred earlier, this sum has been exceeded to the extent of £6,250. The purpose of the new Rule 12 is to remove the limit on the amount which can be expended in this manner.

Thirdly, the Board requires the powers necessary to participate in the work of the Hanover Housing Association, to which I also referred earlier. The new Rule 12 gives the necessary powers.

Finally, our Honorary Solicitors, Messrs Markbys, told us that our existing rules – largely unchanged since 1886 – needed a general overhaul and the opportunity has been taken to do just this.

I do not propose to mention all the other changes – they are set out in the document – but will confine myself to the following points.

Objects: No change at all: they remain as settled by the Court when we took over the Society's Fund after integration.

Subscriptions: Increase in the case of governor from 3 to 5 guineas. Increase from 1 to 3 guineas in the case of an ordinary member. I will return to this topic in a moment.

Management: The management of the Association has been simplified – a Management Committee replaces both the Board of Governors and the Executive Committee. The same people will, however, continue to do the work! Election to the Management Committee becomes democratic. The Executive Committee, through the Board of Governors, has hitherto always replaced its casualties. Now members in general meeting will have their say.

Finally, and on a personal note, the President now has to be elected each year. Previously it has been rather like a life sentence. I do not know whether it was the honorary solicitors or the Secretary who suggested the change but I noticed that the Board of Governors accepted it without comment. (Laughter.)

Before putting the motion to the meeting and giving members an opportunity of expressing their views, I should mention that we have received four letters protesting against the increase in the subscription rate of an ordinary member. In one of the letters there is also a suggestion that it is against the best spirit of the Association that members should be designated according to the amount that they subscribe.

I would like to deal with the second point first. I do not think that we are at all class conscious. When we last issued a list of subscribers to the Association, we referred to everyone as a subscriber; there was no mention of vice-presidents, governors and ordinary members, and we did not even show the amount which was being subscribed by each individual.

The Board of Governors fully accepted the recommendation of the Executive Committee that the subscription of 1 guinea should be increased to 3 guineas; the subscription has remained unaltered since 1886 and if we take the value of money into account, an equivalent sum today would no doubt be 6 guineas or more.

However, if there is any strong feeling among members on this point, I am quite prepared to think again and I hope that the Board of Governors will approve that I should follow the sense of the meeting, and, if need be, move an amendment from the chair to retain the subscription of an ordinary member at 1 guinea.

I like to think that all give as much as they can afford, having regard to what the Association needs. We shall of course continue to welcome subscriptions of any amount.

Now, before I formally put the resolution to the meeting can I have an indication of the sense on this point? I am quite prepared, if need be, to move an amendment, but I want to carry the meeting with me; so, would those who think we ought to retain the membership qualification at a guinea please hold up their hands? No one – thank you. That indicates that there is no strong pressure on that point. I therefore ask the President of the Institute if he will kindly second the resolution which is contained on the printed document, the substance of which is the adoption of the new rules. The meeting will then be open for discussion.

Sir Henry Benson: I second the resolution.

The Chairman: Any comments or questions? (A pause.) That being so I will now put the resolution to the meeting. Those in favour? Thank you very much. Those to the contrary? None – thank you. I am very much obliged to you for your attendance today and for your support, both financial and moral, to this Association. I would also like to take this opportunity of expressing our thanks to the sub-committees in the various districts who do so much to help us by first bringing cases to our notice and secondly by keeping in touch with those we are endeavouring to help, so that our help is something more than merely financial. Thank you.

Mr B. A. Maynard: Lady and gentlemen, that concludes not only the business of this meeting but also ten years of service by Sir William Carrington as President of the Association. Over these years in addition to bringing his distinguished talents to bear on the Society's affairs, we know he has always devoted however much of his valuable time is needed to the Benevolent Association. It is therefore my pleasure both on behalf of those who benefit directly from the work of the Association and also on behalf of those more fortunate members, to thank Sir William very much for presiding over the Association for yet another year. (Acclamation.)

Sir William Carrington: Thank you very much Mr Maynard.

Land: Estate Duty and Land Commission Levy

Mr ALLASON asked the Minister of Housing and Local Government whether it is intended that there shall be relief where there are charges of both estate duty and land commission levy on the development value of the same land in all cases where the double charge can be traced.

Mr WILLEY: An appropriate allowance for levy purposes will be made under the provisions of Schedule 7 to the Land Commission Act for interests in land in respect of which liability for estate duty has arisen within the previous six years but where levy is charged on land which was owned by a company in which the deceased had shares and not by the deceased himself, the schedule is obviously inapplicable.

Mr ALLASON: But is the right hon. gentleman satisfied with this position by which, because land is owned through a family company, double taxation is charged? Has he considered the case which I submitted to him, in which estate duty has been charged at 50 per cent, and a further 40 per cent — making a total of 90 per cent — will be charged on the value of that land?

Mr WILLEY: I am aware of the case which the hon. gentleman mentions, where the land has not changed hands at all. I am also aware that, in that case, the possibility of the question of a charity arises.

Limited Joint-stock Companies

Mr GRESHAM COOKE asked the President of the Board of Trade when he will make a statement about the systematic review of the whole theory and purpose of the limited joint-stock company.

Mr JAY: I hope to make a statement before the summer adjournment.

Taxation Revenue: Companies

Mr BRUCE-GARDYNE asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing United Kingdom taxes on income paid by companies, including tax recovered by deduction from dividends and interest paid, for 1938 and for each of the years since the war.

Mr MACDERMOT: The following table gives estimates of the figures asked for:

1966 ..	771	915	1,686

These figures are on a different basis from those given in a written answer to the hon. Member for Croydon, North-east (Mr Weatherill) on April 4th, 1967. Those figures were for financial years (not calendar years) and did not include the tax withheld on investment income received by companies from outside the company sector (other than interest on British Government Securities). — [Vol. 744, cols 5–6.]

Direct Investment: Sterling and Non-Sterling Areas

Mr ALBU asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the official criteria at present being applied in consideration of direct investment in the sterling area and the non-sterling area, respectively.

Mr MACDERMOT: For direct investment in the non-sterling area exchange control consent is normally given provided that it is unlikely to disadvantage the balance of payments of the U.K. and is financed by appropriate borrowing abroad. Consent is also given for the use of investment currency for projects of £25,000 or less a year, and those of a greater amount which promise an early, substantial and continuing benefit to the U.K. balance of payments. This benefit may be in any form, including export earnings or profits or other income, which will equal or exceed the original outlay within two or three years.

United Kingdom controlled subsidiary companies in the non-sterling area are expected to remit to the United Kingdom as much as possible of their earnings, but are allowed to retain, for ploughing back, what may reasonably be regarded as necessary to carry on the existing business.

Under the voluntary programme companies wishing to make direct investments over £25,000 a year in Australia, New Zealand, South Africa or the Republic of Ireland are requested so far as possible to finance them by appropriate borrowing abroad, or from normal retained earnings of local companies. Remittances from the United Kingdom should be confined to projects which meet the criterion already stated of early, substantial and continuing benefit to the United Kingdom balance of payments.

Direct investment in the rest of the sterling area is not subject to the voluntary programme or to exchange control. In cases where consent is required under the Control of Borrowing Orders, it is given if the transaction is advantageous to the economy and balance of payments of the territory concerned, provided that there is no demonstrable and avoidable detriment to the United Kingdom balance of payments.

MESSRS APLEYARD, SQUIRES, DALE & Co, Chartered Accountants, of Market Place, Dewsbury, announce that on May 1st, 1967, they entered into an association with Messrs ARMITAGE & NORTON, Chartered Accountants, of Huddersfield, Leeds, Bradford, Halifax, Edinburgh and London. ### TAX CONCESSIONS FOR INVESTMENT CLUBS

Following negotiations between the National Association of Investment Clubs and the Inland Revenue, the Revenue have agreed to allow the cost of capital gains tax valuations and apportionments done by N.A.I.C.'s new computer-operated accounting and taxation service for clubs as an allowable expense that may be set against taxable gains.

The concession will materially reduce the cost to clubs of subscribing to the service, which will be about £9 per annum for an average club, of which approximately one-third will be a claimable expense. The service is available to all investment clubs on the same basis, whether or not they are members of N.A.I.C.

LIVERPOOL SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

New President

Mr A. P. Whyte, B.Sc.(ECON.), F.C.A., head of management services of the Merseyside and North Wales Electricity Board, was elected President of The Liverpool Society of Chartered Accountants at a meeting of the committee of the Society held on Wednesday of last week.

A native of Flintshire, Mr Whyte obtained his B.Sc. at the London

School of Economics before serving articles with Mr W. R. Carter, M.A., F.C.A., of Messrs Carter, Chaloner & Kearns, Chartered Accountants, of Manchester. He was admitted to membership of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in 1939.

Mr Whyte was successively divisional secretary to Short Brothers (Rochester and Bedford) Ltd and Sir W. G. Armstrong Whitworth Aircraft Ltd, and also a company secretary, before joining the Merseyside and North Wales Electricity Board in 1948 as chief internal auditor. He is a former hon. treasurer of The Liverpool Society of Chartered Accountants and a past president of the North Western Chapter of the Institute of Internal Auditors.

Other officers elected were:

Vice-President: Mr R. Watson, F.C.A.

Hon. Treasurer: Mr G. English, F.C.A.

Hon. Secretary: Mr M. S. Moon, T.D., F.C.A., 5 Fenwick Street, Liverpool 2.

HOW TO LECTURE

society and Institute courses. There was an attendance of some one hundred and forty members.

Held in the Central Electricity Generating Board's cinema in London, the speaker, Mr Halmer Hudson, F.C.A., discussed in an interesting and enlightening manner (with the help of visual aids) the methods of composing and the art of delivering a lecture. For very many, giving a lecture is, like public speaking, not an easy undertaking. Mr Hudson took his audience through all the problems involved in planning a successful lecture, and clearly indicated the essential principles to be borne in mind by the lecturer.

SOUTH WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

New President

Mr R. P. Tovey, F.C.A., secretary and chief accountant, The Steel Company of Wales Ltd, has been elected President of the South Wales and Monmouthshire Society of Chartered Accountants for 1967-68.

Born in Newport, Mon, and educated at West Buckland School, North

Devon, Mr Tovey served his articles with Walter Meacock & Co, in London and Newport. After passing the final examination with honours, he was admitted to membership of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in 1933.

At the Branch President's luncheon of the Nottingham, Derby and District Branch of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants held recently in Derby, the Branch President, Mr George Lomas, F.C.W.A. (centre) talking to (left to right): Mr W. Hunter, chairman, Celon Division, Courtaulds Ltd; Mr W. L. Spalding, B.Sc.(Econ.), C.A., F.C.W.A., F.C.I.S., then President of the Institute; Mr A. F. Kelly, executive director, Rolls-Royce Ltd, and Mr D. G. Gilman, clerk to Derbyshire County Council.

He entered the steel industry in 1933, and on the formation of The Steel Company of Wales in 1947 was appointed chief accountant. In April last year he became a member of the board in addition to the office of secretary which he has held since 1962.

Mr Tovey is a member of the Society's Regional Technical Advisory Committee and has served on the Institute's Decimal Currency Committee.

Other officers elected for the ensuing year are:

Vice-President: Mr. J. B. Williams, F.C.A.

Secretary: Mr Howard N. Jones, B.A., F.C.A., 63 Park Place, Cardiff.

Treasurer: Mr H. B. Singer, F.C.A.

Librarian: Mr T. W. Pickard, F.C.A.

Annual Report

The report of the committee for 1966-67 expresses satisfaction in the continued increase in the Society's membership which now numbers 904.

Encouraged by the support at meetings in the previous year, the committee arranged a fuller programme during the past session. Meetings on topics of professional interest were held at Cardiff and Swansea and a successful one-day auditing seminar took place at Bridgend. The Society's two luncheon and three dining clubs in the area continue to be well supported.

On the training of articled clerks, the report says that the Society's committee arranged introductory courses for members' clerks and also short examination revision courses at the College of Technology in Cardiff and at the College of Advanced Technology in Swansea. The courses, on average of three weeks' duration, will total eighteen every year. The committee express the hope that principals will encourage their clerks to attend these courses. The report warns that if there is insufficient demand the colleges will be forced to discontinue them.

Plan now for your Company's growth

Why? Because in the next two years the purchase of plant and machinery in manufacturing industry is attracting higher cash grants: all tariffs between the countries of EFTA have now disappeared: It may not be long before the UK enters the Common Market: some reflation of domestic demand must soon take place.

So, despite historically high interest rates—in which few people expect a substantial fall—NOW is the time to install the new plant which will save in cost and provide the capacity you're going to need for both home and export trade.

This is the kind of investment in forward-looking firms that ICFC supports, and it is precisely the kind of help that the Corporation has given to over 1,800 small and medium-sized British companies since 1945.

ICFC provides a complete financial service to industry including the provision of long-term loans and/or share capital, plant purchase and leasing facilities, Stock Exchange flotations and practical advice and guidance.

We make certain that every customer gets the help he needs in a form that ensures healthy growth without financial strain, but we do not interfere in management.

Why not write for our booklet "Capital for Business"? Then get in touch with us at whichever of our offices is most convenient to you.

STATISTICS FOR ACCOUNTANTS

BY R. B. BROCKINGTON, B.Com., A.C.A.

WHY SHOULD AN ACCOUNTANT NEED STATISTICS?

The easy answer to this is that he will need to pass his examinations. All the major accountancy bodies now include statistics in their examination syllabuses. The student, be he working for the examination of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants or The Institute of Company Accountants will need a certain degree of statistical knowledge.

The more difficult answer is that he will need it in his work as an accountant. The fact that these professional bodies include it in their syllabuses indicates that they believe so and this is emphasized by the syllabus for the newly introduced JOINT DIPLOMA IN MANAGEMENT ACCOUNTING SERVICES where the study of statistics is required to an even more advanced level. From being merely a recording function accountancy has become a live information function. A major part of all information used and required by senior management is, and must be, supplied by the accountant.

This is the first book especially designed and written to assist the cognizant executive in his choice of a computer system – and, through this more efficiently to plan for financial profits.

At the outset it is better to face the fact that management information systems are valuable only as long as they contribute to more effective operations. To help in this direction, the present book is very specific. It may also, in places, be controversial: only challenge can derust the old structures.

Management information systems do not develop the right way just by accident. Wise and profitable machine selection will not come about as a matter of chance. Efficiency with computers – as with any other industrial activity – definitely calls for acts of policy. Albeit, often ones that various persons and departments within the enterprise would greatly resent.

The computer (and the computer industry) has been so far a great international home of hoary myths. The time has come to demystify the whole affair. This calls for courage and for preparation. To that end, the book follows the preparatory phases through clear examples: from systems analysis, to unit runs, file specifications, programming, machine comparisons, computing estimates and the handling of the manufacturer, down to the time of decision.

Selecting the Computer System is designed to particularly appeal to:

- ★ Executives directly responsible for the choice of data processing equipment, and its implementation.
- ★ Senior executives, running operations or functional areas. (They will find in it material of substantial interest to their activities – provided they are determined to go beyond the superficial treatment of the subject.)
- ★ Graduate university students majoring in management, computers and information science.

Users of computer systems urgently need to act in a rational manner, if they are not to become toys in the hands of manufacturers. This is particularly important in 1967 when computers in business, industry and Government have past the embryonic stage. Lately, the men responsible for computer applications have come to realize that they have either to plan completely their systems work or they had better not plan at all.

The objective of the chapters treating the mechanics of the planning work is to answer challenging questions:

- ★ Where to start?
- ★ Whom to believe in following alternative ways and means in the implementation of an electronic system?
- ★ How to keep pace with change?
- ★ How to evaluate the profitability of automatic information handling?
- ★ How to identify and set the limits of cost expansion?
- ★ Where to base the decision on the use of more powerful electronic media?
- ★ How to distinguish facts from fiction?

MANAGER

required at Head Office in NW1 of well-known Scientific Instrument Manufacturers, to take charge of Credit Control, Sales Ledger and Invoicing, and Export documentation sections.

He will have managerial experience in at least two of these, and be responsible to the Financial Accountant, with an office staff of 20 people.

This is David Newman's success story -it could be yours at Burroughs

At 23 David Newman had served five years as an articled clerk and passed his final A.C.A. examinations. He looked around for a real career opportunity, joined Burroughs and at 27 he was on a £4,000 a year income. Last year, at only 30, he was promoted Branch Manager at Wolverhampton. Exceptional? By no means. Burroughs always promote from within.

If you're between 22-30, with the ability to communicate ideas fluently this could be the career you have been looking for. As a Consultant Representative you would deal with your own clients at management level, advising them on business systems and financial matters. Here your special knowledge of accountancy could help considerably—and prove very rewarding. Among the new systems you would help to introduce would be the remarkable Burroughs ABC accounting machine which converts from sterling to decimals and back again at the flick of a switch. Burroughs will train you stage by stage starting at not less than your present salary.

STATISTICS

Thirteenth Edition

by A. R. ILLERSIC, M.SC.(ECON.), B.COM., F.I.S.
Professor of Social Studies at Bedford College (University of London)

This edition has been considerably enlarged, and the subject-matter rearranged. It fully covers the requirements of the examination syllabuses of the various professional bodies, and every consideration is given to the reader working with a correspondence course.

'Anyone wishing to obtain a grounding in Statistics could not do better than to buy and study Illersic's book. It is unquestionably the best book available on this subject.' - Secretaries Chronicle.

'... it is universally recommended without reserve to all those who in any way deal with the subject.' - Book-keepers Journal.

★ This work will deal fully with the detailed provisions of the Land Commission Act 1967 and also with the many regulations recorded in Statutory Instruments. An exhaustive coverage will be afforded to the provisions of the Finance Act 1967, which provide a measure of relief for betterment levy paid when calculating liability to income tax, capital gains tax, corporation tax and estate duty. In a text covering several hundred pages, more than two hundred fully worked examples illustrate the practical working and effect of the betterment levy. ★

CORPORATION TAX

By Percy F. Hughes and T. L. A. Graham, F.C.A.

Although the introduction of corporation tax and income tax under Schedule F was heralded as a simplification of the taxation of company profits and distributions, the provisions of the Finance Act 1965, giving effect to the new taxes, and of the Finance Act 1966, making additions and amendments thereto, scarcely merit the description 'simple'.

This authoritative book, of some 860 pages, with its many practical examples, will enable its readers, whether they be practitioners, engaged in industry or students, to resolve difficulties and appreciate the intricacies of the new law.

The opportunity has been taken to include in appendices, both the new legislation and the old in so far as this applies to the new system of taxation of company profits and distributions.

Nothing comes amiss to Miss Martin (she's very cool at calculating)

Miss Martin operates calculating machines. She is on the 'outdoor' staff of Ajax who supply experienced operators to work on your own premises. Give Ajax a ring, and Miss Martin—or one of her equally efficient colleagues—will be with you right away. On your own machine, or one that we supply, any kind of calculating job will be carried out accurately and quickly. So if your own operators are 'snowed-under', just contact Ajax. We can also carry out your calculating on our premises, or should you need an operator for a permanent position this can be arranged through our placement bureau.

We are proud of the services we offer you.

HERE'S WHY—Every Ajax operator has passed our own proficiency test and is a person who will respect your company's confidence. A copy of the test paper is available to all potential clients.

Value for Money

TIMES may change; men, even if they are in Government, do not. Three centuries ago a perceptive diarist observed, 'it may be impossible for the King to have things done as cheap as other men, but if we cannot get economy, we ought at least to have efficiency'.

The Government's White Paper 'Public Purchasing and Industrial Efficiency (Cmd 3291) does not suggest that PEPYS if he were still alive, or the average taxpayer, is likely to change his views on departmental spending in the near future. It makes all the obvious points about limiting the number of varieties of similar products, the need to encourage quality control and, not least, for co-ordinating the separate requirements of the various departments. The Government hopes also to benefit from the experience of a leading chain store in the purchasing of standardized products, for it is apparently often overlooked that prior consultation with manufacturers to achieve economic runs of a standard product are conducive to low costs and efficiency in production.

It is not sufficient, however, merely to enunciate principles. They have to be implemented and this requires effective control of the persons responsible. Opinions may differ on the extent to which British industry is cost conscious, but this must be coupled with a similar basic desire in Government departments to keep costs down. This desirable state of affairs will not be achieved without trained staff to check on performance.

Cost control is part technical and part financial. On the design, quality and production of the specified product, the accountant can play little part, except to ask the obvious questions about costs and the rate of profit expected. When it comes to the effective supervision of costs, however, then the accountant comes into his own. Effective control of costs cannot be achieved merely by verifying that the completed product has cost no more than the quoted purchase price. Such checks, however, do help to restrain purchasing departments from revising specifications half-way through the production process; they also provide a post-mortem on the efficiency of both the costing and production departments.

Such control of costs alone is not always effective, least of all in Government departments where the sheer volume of purchases makes detailed checking difficult, if not impossible. What is needed is a much greater awareness of cost control in purchasing departments; qualified staff to ensure that specifications and expected costs are being observed and, not least, sanctions upon those who fail.

Tonic for the Banks?

THE more progressive of our banker friends must have been reading the Prices and Incomes Board Report on Bank Charges<sup>1</sup> with mixed feelings. Some of them have been advocating, this long time past, much the same kind of new thinking that Mr AUBREY JONES now suggests; but they may feel, even so, that the report does less than justice either to the changes they have already initiated or to the basic service they render.

On the question actually referred to him Mr JONES returns a reluctant-seeming clean bill of health: 'we have received no information to indicate that commission charges are generally too high', and the banks' profits are 'excessive' only because of the linking of their lending rates with Bank rate – and only when (though the report does not emphasize this point) Bank rate is high. But the Prices and Incomes Board has looked at the background to the charges, and examined the general efficiency of the clearing banks (and their opposite numbers in Scotland and Northern Ireland) and the environment in which they operate. And the diagnosis is that the banks need a tonic.

The falling away in the rate of growth of the banks is attributed mainly to the checks on competition implied by their agreements on interest rates, both on loans and deposits. All such agreements should be dissolved, says the Board; the banks should compete freely for deposits and for loans, both amongst themselves and against the other deposit collectors who have been taking an increasing share of the deposit cake. They are given little credit for the competition they have initiated already, through holdings in hire-purchase companies and through subsidiaries: they should go into these businesses directly, and be permitted to forget the Government control that has fettered them in the past. Some of these controls, including the required cash and liquidity ratios, should be extended to cover a wider range of institutions than they have covered even in the latest freeze.

More competition – including more flexible hours of opening; more published information, too. The basis of commission charges should be published; so should true profit figures. Publication would be in the interests of competition; but in one aspect of their activities the banks are criticized for being too competitive already. Competitive opening of branches can be wasteful of scarce resources; not the least interesting paragraph in the report recommends further amalgamations, and states that the Bank of England and the Treasury would approve, though there is no indication of how far the process should go. The Big Four? The Big Two?

The banks' true profits were disclosed to the Board in confidence, and only indices are published here, but even these will be closely studied by aficionados. Methods of assessing charges are described in some detail, and branch distribution is analysed in similar detail. The report discusses briefly the relative costs to the community of cash and bank deposits as alternative forms of money, leaving it however to 'the public authorities' to decide whether the cost of cash is such that the banks should be helped to provide their transfer services at below cost, for example, by relieving them of the stamp duty on cheques. The banks would obviously approve; they might point out, in support of such a development, that they alone provide the machinery for distribution of notes and coin, a fact which, incidentally, is nowhere noted in the report.

The Board takes a backward look at building societies, on which they reported earlier, and recommend that they, like the banks, should dissolve their collective agreement. And a forward look leads to the suggestion that our financial institutions are so intimately linked that it would be a good thing for others amongst them to be studied, as building societies and banks have now been studied.

This Bank Charges Report will be no bad model for any such further studies. The Prices and Incomes Board could well have acknowledged the banks' virtues more generously – that their loans are the cheapest in the market, that their normal commission charge (which the Board find to be a shilling an entry) is no higher than it was in 1939, that their husbandry has weathered long periods of low Bank rate – and indeed that in the past decade they have been showing a good deal more competitive spirit. But it has been on a small scale in comparison with what the Prices and Incomes Board now recommend. There will be long debate as to the merits of the suggestions, which involve, among many other consequences, harder times for other parts of the financial complex, not least the discount market. But the banks should have shown a little more enthusiasm than they did in their first comments on the report for the Board's suggestion, fundamental to all that followed, that they ought to be 'commercial institutions, evolving in a changing commercial environment', rather than docile instruments in the apparatus of monetary control.

FINANCE BILL

Group Relief

THE old provisions for relief for subvention payments between companies in a group have been found to be unnecessarily restrictive. At present, companies have to go into elaborate rituals of entering into legal contracts with each other purely for the purpose of satisfying the tax inspector, who has one eye on the decision in Montague Meyer Ltd v. Naylor (40 A.T.C. 31). Sometimes these rituals have to be performed very rapidly indeed.

Clause 19 and Schedule 10 to the new Finance Bill introduce a new and elaborate code which will enable a group of companies to channel losses of individual companies to the more profitable members of the group. This is called 'group relief'. It covers not only trading losses, but also capital allowances (given by discharge or repayment), management expenses, and charges.

Clause 19 and Schedule 10 speak of 'companies'. The provisions fall within Part III of the Bill, which has to be construed as one with the Corporation Tax Acts (clause 43 (3) (e)). The Finance Act 1965, section 46 (5), defines 'company' to mean any body corporate or unincorporated association, excluding a partnership. However, for the purposes of group relief all the members of a group must be bodies corporate, and they must be resident in the United Kingdom (clause 19 (4)). Two companies are members of a group if one is a subsidiary of the other or both are subsidiaries of a third. For this purpose 'subsidiary' has the same meaning as it had for profits tax under the Finance Act 1938, section 42, i.e., the holding company must beneficially own, broadly speaking, three-quarters of the subsidiary's 'ordinary share capital'. The share capital of an industrial and provident society must be treated as ordinary share capital for this purpose. The holding company is not to be treated as the owner of any share capital which it owns

- (a) directly in a body corporate if a 'profit' on the sale of the shares would be treated as a trading 'receipt' (sic) of its trade;
- (b) indirectly (i.e. through another company) and which is owned directly by a body corporate for which a profit on the sale of the shares would be a trading receipt; or
- (c) directly or indirectly in a body corporate not resident in the United Kingdom.

The test of what constitutes a group is thus a highly arbitrary one, and companies may well find that through inadvertence they have failed to comply with it. It is, of course, impossible to create the conditions retrospectively. One inflexible rule is that both surrendering company and claimant company must be members of the same group throughout the whole of the surrendering company's accounting period and also throughout the whole of the corresponding period of the claimant company. The only relaxation (if it can be so called) is that a company is not required to be a member of the group before it has been incorporated (Schedule 10, paragraph 7). Any accounting period of the claimant company which falls wholly or partly within an accounting period of the surrendering company 'corresponds' to that accounting period for this purpose (paragraph 6 (1)).

If the two accounting periods do not entirely coincide then the amount available for set off (and the profits available for set off) is scaled down by a formula using the following symbols:

A = the length of the period common to both accounting periods.

B = the accounting period of the surrendering company.

C = the length of the corresponding accounting period of the claimant company.

The amount available for set off is scaled down to the fraction  $\frac{A}{B}$  and the profits available for set off are scaled down to  $\frac{A}{C}$

Assume that S incurs a loss of £15,000 in the accounting period of twelve months ended on October 31st, 1968, and C makes a profit of £20,000 in the accounting period for the twelve months ended on April 30th, 1969. The common period A is six months, which in each case is one-half of the accounting period. Thus £7,500 is available for set-off against not more than £10,000 of C's profit.

The reason why the accounting period is chosen is that that is the period for which corporation tax is charged (Finance Act 1965, section 51 (1)). Elaborate provisions for defining an accounting period are contained in section 51 (2) (3), one result of which is that an accounting period can never exceed twelve months.

Paragraph 1 of Schedule 10 deals with trading losses as computed under section 58 (2), which subsection provides for the set-off of a loss against other profits of any description in the accounting period. Paragraph 1 (1) provides that the surrendering company's loss in an accounting period ended after the passing of the 1967 Finance Act may be set off against the profits of the claimant company for its corresponding accounting period, subject to the limitations set out above where the two periods do not coincide. Paragraph

2 deals with capital allowances falling to be made to the surrendering company which

- (i) are to be given by discharge or repayment, and
- (ii) are to be available primarily against a specified class of income.

So much of these allowances (excluding any brought forward) as exceeds the surrendering company's income of the relevant class arising in the accounting period (before deduction of losses or capital allowances) can be set off against the profits of the claimant company for the corresponding accounting period.

We come now to management expenses claimable by an investment company under section 57 (1) of the Finance Act 1965. Paragraph 3 (1) provides that the excess of the management expenses (excluding expenses brought forward under section 57 (2)) over the investment company's profits of the accounting period for which those management expenses were disbursed, may be claimed by the claimant company against his whole profits, whether or not it is an investment company. In arriving at the surrendering investment company's profits for this purpose, no deduction is to be made for management expenses or for losses or allowances of another period.

If a surrendering company which pays charges on income in any accounting period, then the excess if any of those charges over the profits of the period may be set off against the profits of the claimant company. For this purpose the surrendering company's profits are computed without regard to deductions in respect of losses or allowances of any other period, or management expenses brought forward.

With such a patchwork of reliefs as appear in the Corporation Tax Acts, it is necessary to have some rule as to the order of allowance, because this can make a difference to ultimate liability. This rule, or rather an elaborate series of rules, are contained in paragraph 5 of Schedule 10 in the Bill. The general principle appears in paragraph 5 (1). All other reliefs are to be given first, before group relief, except a relief 'derived from a subsequent accounting period'. This latter phrase is defined in paragraph 5 (4) which sets out four different cases where the Finance Act 1965 allows relief to be carried back to an earlier accounting period. This carrying back is to be after the allowance of the group relief. The four cases of carrying back are those contained in sections 58 (2) (trading loss), 56 (6) (capital allowance given by discharge or repayment), 87 (transitional relief on early cessation of a trade) and 59 (terminal loss).

Having got the carry-back reliefs out of the way, one must assume that all relevant claims for relief under sections 58 (2) (trading loss) and 56 (6) (capital allowances) have been made (paragraph 5 (2)). Accordingly, where those claims have not been made, the group relief will still be computed on the footing that they have. As to the priority of other reliefs over group relief, paragraph 5 (3) makes it clear that relief for charges under section 52 (1) is to be given before group relief notwithstanding the statement in section 52 (1) that relief under that subsection is to be given against total profits 'so reduced by any other relief from tax'.

Suppose now that group relief has been given for accounting period (1) and that reliefs for accounting period (2) fall to be carried back under any of the four provisions mentioned above. Paragraph 5 (5) provides expressly that such carry back is to be against profits of accounting period (1) as reduced by the group relief. This is so notwithstanding that the transitional relief on cessation of a trade is expressed to be given in priority to any other relief. There is an overall provision directed against double group relief and against any group relief given to two or more claimant companies for the same loss etc., exceeding what would have been the relief to a single claimant company whose corresponding accounting period coincided with the surrendering company's loss period. Section 331 (5) of the Income Tax Act 1952 already provides, in general, that references in Part X to capital allowances 'made' include references to allowances which would have been made but for insufficiency of profit. Paragraph 8 (3) extends this by saying that such references include references to allowances which would have been made but for group relief.

A claim for group relief requires the consent of the surrendering company (which takes the place of the old 'agreement') and has to be made, if at all, within two years after the end of the surrendering company's relevant accounting period. This puts a premium on getting accounts out without undue delay. The claim can be restricted to a part of what could be claimed. Excessive relief can be recovered by the inspector making an assessment under Case VI of Schedule D.

How is one to apply the shortfall provisions to a close company where there has been group relief? This question is answered by paragraph 10 which covers a whole page of the Bill. Paragraph 7 of Schedule 18 to the Finance Act 1965 contains various definitions for the purposes of computing shortfalls. One of these is of 'distributable profits' of a company. Paragraph 7 (1) directs the deduction of the corporation tax in arriving at the distributable profits. Now paragraph 10 (1) of Schedule 10 in the Bill says in effect that one takes into account the actual amount of that tax, after group relief. Subject to this, however, the group relief is not to affect the paragraph 7 computations. It is to be assumed for shortfall purposes, in the case of a surrendering company, that it has claimed the relief which it surrendered. If the surrendering company has received a payment (i.e. from the claimant company) in respect of group relief then the corporation tax to be taken into account for the purpose of computing distributable profits of the surrendering company is to be reduced up to the amount of the group relief (in terms of tax). Correspondingly, where a claimant company has made such a payment then the deduction for corporation tax is increased by the amount of the payment. However, in both cases the payment in question is confined to a payment

- (a) which is made by the claimant company to the surrendering company within three years from the end of the surrendering company's accounting period to which the claim relates; and
- (b) which is in respect of the relief claimed and is of an amount not exceeding the amount of corporation tax which in pursuance of the claim may be discharged or repaid to the claimant company'.

Current Affairs

Under-insurance

FACED with rising fire losses (fire wastage in Britain during 1966 was double the figure for 1961), the whole insurance market has decided to tighten up on the question of under-insurance. Insurers know from their claims experience that under-insurance is widespread throughout the country and a conservative estimate is that, on average, under-insurance is of the order of 25 per cent.

To force up insured values, as policies covering fire and 'special perils' are renewed on and after July 1st, the pro rata condition of average will be introduced. In the case of insurances subject to long-term agreements which do not permit adjustment of terms during their currency, the clause will be added at the first renewal on or after the expiry of the period of the agreement current on July 1st.

The practical effect of this is that, if there is under-insurance, a policy-holder will only be able to recover that proportion of his loss which the amount of his policy bears to the total value of the property covered at the time of the loss. Where there are several items of property insured, average will be applied separately to each item of the policy. Thus, where there is under-insurance, a policy-holder will be penalized by having every claim reduced in the same proportion.

This decision to apply average should result in an appreciable increase in premium for both the insurance companies and underwriters at Lloyd's. At the same time, it will ensure equitable treatment between those who insure for the full value of their property and those who are under-insured. In the past, those in the latter category have tended to benefit by paying a lower premium and yet still having their partial losses paid in full.

Private houses and their contents are one of the few exceptions to the general decision to apply average. Also excluded is any property which is privately owned and insured in the name of the owner in a building occupied for trade purposes. Insurers hope that their campaign to educate householders about the dangers of under-insurance, which includes fairly extensive television advertising, will be successful. If it is not, householders' policies may have to be brought into line.

Revenue Staff Problems

ONLY the uninformed observer could imagine that the difficulties of the Inland Revenue were inaugurated by the passing of the 1965 Finance Act. For many years now the Board has sought to keep the tax administration effective, despite major difficulties, particularly in London, in attracting adequate staff. The shortages extend all the way down, from the grade of inspector to the typing pool.

Not surprisingly, two addresses at the annual conference of the Inland Revenue Staff Federation were devoted to these issues. In the first, Mr Anthony Christopher, Assistant General Secretary, drew attention to the serious back-log of work. There were over 400,000 letters a week old as yet untouched, while the review of the 1965-66 P.A.Y.E. assessments had hardly begun. One in three of the existing staff are still in some stage of being trained.

It was left to Mr W. G. Lloyd, in his presidential address, to draw the conclusions for the public on this unsatisfactory state of affairs. He was, to start with, none too happy at the public image of the Civil Service fostered by so many vocal critics and, drawing attention to the fact that the average rate of pay in the basic grade at £15 per week was below the national average of clerical salaries, commented that if these conditions continued, the public would get the sort of service they were ready to pay for. The current quality of service had been maintained only by unselfish devotion to duty, excessive overtime and a willingness on the part of the union to co-operate with the Board on staffing matters.

While the basic facts can hardly be disputed, the solution to the present situation may not consist solely of pay increases and better rates for the basic grades. The real point is that the income tax was never designed as an instrument of general taxation; even the P.A.Y.E. system which devolves much of the work on to the employer, is expensive in labour. This is merely another reason for undertaking an early review of the United Kingdom tax structure.

Patents in 1966

THE Comptroller-General's annual report on the work of the Patent Office in 1966 was published last week (H.M.S.O. Price 3s 6d). Patent applications were again at a new record level, as were complete specifications which rose by 2,437 to 47,079. The Patent Office was unable to keep pace with this and the backlog of unexamined specifications rose by 1,763.

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

I ATTENDED a week-long residential 'sensitivity' conference last month. It wasn't my idea in the first place, far from it. In fact, as the old song says: 'I didn't want to do it, . . . you made me do it', and our directors were the responsible parties. I'd learn a lot about mal-adjusted human nature and about dealing with the idiosyncrasies of my difficult colleagues, they insisted, and I was acutely conscious of their implied consciousness of my own personal foibles. That was why I couldn't really argue back.

Anyhow, about a dozen participants, all strangers to one another, sat in a glum semi-circle one Monday morning, eyeing each other suspiciously. A smug professor of psychology explained smilingly that we were there to learn how other people reacted to us, how to comprehend and analyse our mutual impact, and how we all shared similar sensitive reciprocities. Then he fell silent.

After silence had reigned for some minutes I inquired courteously about our time-table and the Professor said beamingly that it was up to us. A bulldog-faced character asked about our agenda and got the same answer. The message sank in slowly.

Some rather facetious remarks about it being a long leisurely week, and some indignant protests at wasting time on trans-Atlantic mumbo-jumbo, received the same benevolent treatment. He'd help all he could, smiled the Professor, but surely, among so many distinguished executives, either apathy or boredom would be inconceivable.

By midday the more talkative types were fencing enjoyably; by mid-afternoon a voluble extrovert was over-dramatizing his tedious troubles; by dinner-time the resentful minority were chipping in tersely with the air of men casting pearls before swine. Just then the Professor shrewdly circulated short questionnaires, to be returned unsigned and unidentified, about our secret worries. Just to humour the fellow, we whispered (because after all the poor crank was only doing his job) we completed them.

It was extraordinary how the prevalent note, when he read them aloud later, was one of insecurity . . . we all had hidden ulcers. Their exposure brought relief. Cupping our brandy goblets, masked in the friendly semi-darkness, we reminisced like prophets of doom.

On Tuesday we established friendly relationships, on Wednesday we asked the Professor about strictly hypothetical case-histories. He listened intently and suggested that perhaps Alan here, or Sam on the sofa, could help out. By Thursday the cloistered hotel suite, the long working hours, and the evening drinks, loosened our tongues and broke down our resistance. Intimacy ripened. Conscious of the sands running out, we let rip.

Bulldog-face was telling me about his wife's nervous breakdown, and the extrovert, honest for once, was almost weeping about the problems with his company merger. A muttering in the background about somebody's miserly pension scheme cut across an agonized heart-cry: 'If they axe my department, I'll have to get out, do you hear, get out, just like that!' I found myself explaining feverishly to the mastermind that the deputy-chairman had had his knife in me from the start and I could do nothing to stave off impending disaster. How about calling Mortimer over for a chat, replied the expert; perhaps he could help?

Mortimer explained ponderously that he personally liked my style, the salt of the earth, old man, jolly good show. Others of course might think differently, naturally, about all those dashed highfalutin wisecracks . . . then he became cautious and shut up.

We departed next day with warm but evasive good-byes. My companions' heartaches had been sorrowful but hardly unique; they had counterparts in my own office. In view of our department's small budget for staff training it boiled down to a choice between taxation seminars and exercises in supplying solace or heartbalm in the future. Meantime I propose to minimize these remarks . . . Mortimer was an idiot, but he might have got something.

For faster programming

WATCH YOUR LANGUAGE

NOW I.C.T. offer a commercial language compiler that gets a computer into action quicker—and so makes it productive earlier. New 1900 Series COBOL is a full-scale COBOL. Written in basic English in a standard format, it is easy to learn, write and amend. And it can be used on computers costing as little as £70,000.

Savings from the Outset

The new full-scale COBOL compiler has programs ready, tested and running much quicker because it needs only one-fifth of the program-writing time of low-level languages and one-fifth the (assembly code) debugging time.

Savings on the Run

Program development and ad hoc jobs can be dealt with faster during normal running because less programmer and machine time is needed for necessary—but unproductive—

testing. Typical compilation speed: 600 statements per minute.

Special note: Because COBOL documentation is standard, not only are programming training costs reduced, but the same program can be carried through without delay even if there is a change in programming staff.

For detailed information about COBOL in full-scale and compact versions, please get in touch with International Computers and Tabulators Limited, 85-91 Upper Richmond Road, Putney S.W.15.

I.C.T. COBOL—yet another plus for Management

The Comptroller-General points out that other Patent Offices are in similar difficulty and that the Netherlands has already changed its patent law so that a specification is not examined until it is certain that the applicant wishes to proceed with it. West Germany has a draft law on similar lines and proposals before the United States Congress envisage the possible introduction of something of the kind. He also draws attention to the extent to which the work of Patent Offices is duplicated. Of the 47,079 complete specifications received in the British Office in 1966, over 14,000 originated in the United States and 6,900 in West Germany. Of the complete specifications examined in the British office, 70 per cent now come from abroad.

Commercial Debt Recovery

A MAJOR expansion in the commercial debt recovery field is to be made by British Debt Services Ltd, of Manchester, which is Britain's biggest trade protection organization. The company's Commercial Debt Recovery Division is being considerably enlarged and is introducing a new service based on the 'gentle approach'.

One of the company's executives will have special responsibility for expanding the division. In doing so he has at his fingertips the millions of items of credit information collected by the company's Consumer Debt Recovery Division and its regional bureaux in London, Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, Nottingham, Newcastle upon Tyne, Leeds and Glasgow.

In the past two years the company has made an extensive study of methods used by trade protection firms in Britain and abroad to recover commercial debts – mainly money owed by shopkeepers and wholesalers to merchants and manufacturers. It has been found that, particularly in Britain, the cost of recovering debts is often uneconomic, both to the collecting agency and to the client, and that too many cases are taken to Court unnecessarily.

As a result it has been decided that the 'gentle approach' is the most effective way of recovering commercial debts. The first move is to make a personal approach to the debtor; Court action is taken only as a last resort where there is evidence that a debtor has the means to pay but is wilfully refusing to do so.

One of the company's aims while recovering debts is to try to repair the broken relationship between the debtor and the company's client so that it will be possible for them to do business with each other again.

The Principles and Aims of Budgetary Control

by PROFESSOR H. C. EDEY, B.Com., F.C.A.

Department of Accounting, The London School of Economics and Political Science

CONTROL cannot properly be separated from planning. Unless you know where you want to go you cannot say how far you have strayed from your path. There are, no doubt, differences of opinion about the financial goals of business. Despite these, I think it can be assumed that for control purposes a business plan can be expressed in terms of three concepts:

- (i) the initial endowment of resources;
- (ii) the potential flow of cash from the business to its owners from the beginning of the plan to some defined future date, or into the indefinite future; and
- (iii) the present value (to those owners) that is set upon that flow.

A paper presented at a recent Symposium on Budgetary Control for managers and technologists, arranged by the Production Engineering Research Association of Great Britain.

The relation between the cash flow and the present value depends upon the other opportunities for investment available to the owners and the uncertainties of estimation. The relation is, for measurement purposes, expressed as a 'capitalization' or 'discount' rate. A financial objective can then be expressed in the form:

Maximize  $V - C$

$C$  being the initial investment – the value of the initial resources – and  $V$  being defined as follows:

$$V = \sum_{t=1}^n d_t(1+r)^{-t}$$

where  $d_t$  is the cash flowing to the owner at time  $t$ , and  $r$  is the appropriate rate of discount expressed as a rate per cent per unit period ( $t$  being an integer). The  $d$ 's and  $r$ 's are, of course, expectations.

Business planning then involves relating actions or sets of actions (which imply decisions) to possible values of  $d$ 's and  $r$ 's and, therefore, of  $V$ .

The general problem of control over the business activities as a whole can now be stated. It is to measure the changing value of  $V$  as the business moves through time and to relate this measurement to the figures that were planned earlier, with the objects of:

- (a) adjusting plans and decisions to the extent required by deviations from the initial assumptions and estimates;
- (b) improving future performance in planning and action by studying the causes of these deviations.

An important part of (b) is the experience gained of the performance of people; this involves establishing relations between financial measurements and personal responsibility, before and after the event. When we speak of 'costs' and 'revenues' it is to change in the set of cash flows, negative or positive, and to the equivalent in terms of the present value, that we should, I think, be referring – at any rate when we are concerned with management decisions as distinct from such legal matters as tax assessment and company law.

$V$  is a function of the  $d$ 's and  $r$ 's. It should, therefore, be sufficient to control the values of these. I shall limit my discussion to the former.

The cash flow and long-run control

The rest of this paper will be concerned with the control of cash flow. The principle of control is to check actual results against the budget figures. But such a control cannot be left until after the event. You cannot wait twenty years, until a long-run plan is completed, in order to see what went wrong. It is like riding a bicycle: the corrections must be made as you go. This idea is familiar enough to engineers; but it raises formidable problems.

Each year a re-budget for the succeeding years must be made to project the net cash flow and its major components in the light of the new conditions. These will, in general, differ from the old. At the same time, last year's figures are reported and compared with those in the original budget. These two operations cannot be divorced, unfortunately. It is easy enough to compare cash surpluses released this year with those projected for this year. A good deal can be done by way of detailed study of what went wrong. But what happened this year is nearly always inextricably linked with what will happen in later years. The causal links run over our conventional time divisions. The inter-temporal relationships can range from the obvious to the very subtle. A shortfall of cash this year may be due to the disruption of a production programme or even mere failure to send a bill to debtors. There may be no long-run effects. On the other hand, an excess of cash over budget in year 1 might be brought about by a policy of making inferior products: this could have a negative effect on cash flows for years into the future. The problem is to find out when such a cause-and-effect chain exists, and to evaluate it.

Apart from such interrelationships, the long-run budget must be adjusted for those changes in the assumptions on which the original figures were based that have become apparent during the current year, whether these changes arise out of the technical, economic, social or political environments, or arise from decisions within the business, such as may result from changes in staff or policy, or simply from growth in knowledge. There does not seem to be any standard procedure by which this kind of problem can be tackled. The important thing seems to be: to be aware of its existence and in particular to provide for as thorough a continued monitoring of the assumptions on which the long-run plan is based as is practicable. This suggests the desirability of establishing check-lists of the important assumptions underlining the long-run projections so that the budgets can be examined periodically for continued validity in the light of current conditions. The check-lists will cover, in addition to the appropriate rate of discount for valuing the cash flow and future rates of interest for borrowing, which may affect the choice of plans and the overall optimization decisions, such matters as the external economic conditions that affect the relative prices of inputs and outputs, the aggregate demand for outputs and inputs, the tax law, the physical environment, internal know-how and organizational arrangements.

The planning procedures, whether these be rule of thumb and trial and error or more subtle operational research methods, must be applied to the new conditions in the light of the main objectives so that a new expected cash flow can be projected. We can then, in principle, compare the cash flows of the current year and of all future years – as originally projected, and as now re-budgeted – and search for the causes of the variances. I believe such principles will be applied in the control procedures of the future, though I have no doubt that the monitoring and re-budgeting will be by computer program and will be continuous throughout the year. At present the procedure is crude and empirical and often neglected.

Accounting reports

Accounting procedures must be considered here for they are used widely as a substitute for, or in conjunction with, the type of procedure I have just outlined. At first glance the figures the accountant provides seem to avoid the problems I have indicated, for they can relate to a single year and they appear to provide directly for the comparison of the  $V$ 's of our model, budgeted and actual, without the necessity for breaking down the formulation into the  $d$  stream and the discounting rates  $r$ . This is done by substituting for our total value  $V$ , an alternative figure for the interest of the residual owners, which we may call  $V'$ , found by classifying all the business resources, positive and negative, into discrete classes ('assets' and 'liabilities'), recording value changes in these on the basis of standardized rules, and summing the results algebraically. The change in  $V'$  from any management action or succession of actions – such as the conduct of the whole enterprise for a year – is very far from being the same figure as the corresponding change in  $V$  from the same action, as the management will assess it. There are two reasons:

- (a) standard accounting procedures (the ultimate foundation of which must be sought in legal rules) are not closely related to future expectations – yet as we have seen the present and the future cannot, in general, be separated;
- (b) asset changes which are recorded do not usually include any residual change in the value of the undertaking, such as may be due to improvements or deteriorations in the general conditions, internal or external, under which the firm operates.

What we call accounting profit is no more than the measured change, from one date to the next, in the value  $V'$ , after deducting or adding, as the case may require, payments made between the firm and its owners. The major limitation of this figure as a measure of success and as a control figure is now, I hope, apparent.

Short-run control

We are far from solving satisfactorily the problem of long-run control, whether we are considering the control of the whole firm and the assessment of the effectiveness of top management, or the control of capital budgets (which by definition involve the long-run) and the effectiveness of those responsible for these budgets. The position with respect to short-run control – control in which we concentrate our attention mainly on the cash flow in the current year and the near future – is somewhat happier.

Few businesses can claim financial success on the basis of one year's results; but the space of one year is ample for such an adverse deviation from plan as can be very serious for the future of the business or even completely disastrous, for example, through failure to foresee cash deficits, or careless use of resources. The control of the operations of a given year forms an important part – indeed a major part – of the longer-run control, in that changes in the assumptions that have been made for the purpose of the longer-run plans can be thrown up by the short-run control methods, thus contributing to the completion of the check-lists which I have already mentioned.

Standard costing and flexible budgets

The basic control tools used by modern accountants are standards and flexible budgets. The standard control systems described in textbooks are usually extremely simple in their essential ideas, but are often unduly intricate arithmetically in that instead of a few simple indicators being produced, reports contain a mass of figures the interpretation of which may well distract attention from more fundamental questions. We are not clever enough yet to use any but very simple costing systems. The really important elements, as I see them, in standard costing (or standard profit control, as it might be better to call it) can be stated quite shortly. First, we have the laying down clearly of specifications of the operation or process whose cost we wish to control, in terms of operational layouts, material usage, labour requirements and so on, the money value equivalent of these being arrived at by applying to the physical quantities appropriate price or wage rates, or such other standard money amounts per period of time as are believed to reflect in a satisfactory way the use of resources.

Another essential element of the system is the continuous monitoring of the standards once they have been established. There is no reason why this monitoring should not sometimes be carried out by some kind of sampling process – there is, I believe, much scope for the application of systematic sampling methods in the field of cost accounting. It will be better sometimes to monitor easily measurable physical quantities (such as labour hours) together with the assumptions by which these have been converted into value (for example, the wage rate structure and the mix of labour categories used on a particular job), than to attempt to work out in full the value equivalents.

Another fundamental of control by standards is that only significant variances from standards are reported, so that the management do not have their time wasted by voluminous reports about everything. Finally, the variances must be reported as soon as they happen, when it is easiest to interpret them and to apply the lessons learnt.

The term 'flexible budget' is usually applied to expense standards relating to the whole activity of a given section of the business for a given period, whereas standard costs and revenues usually relate to a particular operation or process, or unit of output. As the name implies, such a budget is not so much a single standard as a set of standards, each relevant for a particular level of activity. It expresses, therefore, the 'cost function' for the activity under specified conditions: the variation in total cost as the level of activity changes.

Both of these devices, by breaking down the components of cost into detailed classifications, e.g. according to function and responsibility, and by the various inputs purchased and used, can provide for the analysis of variances between actual and budgeted figures in ways that can be extremely illuminating.

Contributions and allocations

A major development in management accounting in recent years that affects the setting of standards and the construction of flexible budgets (though it has relevéance also for long-run control) has been the acceptance of what may be called the 'contribution approach' to planning and control. The essence of this approach is that, in any choice between alternative actions, attention should be directed towards an assessment of the variation in the economic position of the enterprise caused by choosing one action rather than the other, and not to mere book-keeping figures. In terms of my decision model, this means that the essential consideration is the difference in  $V$  that will result from the decision, or, if we assume all the  $r$ 's unchanged, in the values of the  $d$ 's – the cash flow; rather than the difference in  $V'$ , the conventional accounting valuation, or in conventional sub-decisions of  $V'$ .

The irrelevance of so-called 'allocations' of overhead cost in choosing between production of product  $X$  or product  $Y$  is gradually becoming accepted. The old concepts of the 'total cost' of a product made up of prime cost plus an overhead allocation, and of 'overhead absorption', are giving way to the concepts of the avoidable cost involved in any given decision and of the total contribution towards non-allocable expenses and profit. The really difficult problem arises from the interdependence of most of the activities of business. I have already discussed interdependence through time. Similar, though somewhat less intractable (and unavoidable, even in much short-run control), is the problem of interdependence between activities in the same period.

Budgetary control involves, among other things, the relating of variations in cost or revenue to changes, or possible changes, in plans, with the object of helping to determine whether the latter are justified. The cost and revenue standards and flexible budgets, and their relationships to the reported results, give first approximation answers. But neither standards nor budgets can be correct unless we can assume that the conditions for which they are valid hold, and that no change elsewhere in the business has affected the assumptions on which they are based. Standards and budgets can only be valid under a limited range of conditions; and it is in most circumstances impossible to specify these fully. Allowances must be made for this in the interpretation of reports of variances. This, it seems, must often be a matter of judgement.

Control by responsibility

We usually want to test the relationships between particular financial outcomes and the men responsible for particular functions. A special case of this is the control over the outcome of the whole business which reflects the capacity of management. This kind of control is, as I have already said, only effective to the extent that we can effectively take long-run considerations into account, or rule them out.

The time interdependence problem can be reduced by reducing the responsibility of the person concerned to specified actions within a given period. It is possible to impose very precise financial limits on action, for example, by specifying what he can spend under each of a stated set of heads and by defining in detail what resources he is to end the period with. It is much more difficult to define sufficiently precisely the way a man is to exercise his function – the quality of his work. And control of this kind can only operate by limiting severely his freedom of choice, with all the consequential effects in damping incentive and encouraging conformity.

At the other end of the spectrum is the exercise of control at the most general level by placing resources of stated value under the control of the manager responsible for a function and merely requiring him to produce a specified cash flow. The problem of control here is exactly that which arises in the control of the actions of top management: normally the time interdependences make any short-run financial assessment almost irrelevant in itself. In practice the control must usually lie somewhere between these extremes. A target may be set of the long-run type indicated by the decision model; but the manager must also get his annual budgets approved in detail, which implies that the short-run cash flows are under fairly close supervision, as is the general structure of his assets and liabilities.

The interdependences inside the business further complicate the issue. We are all familiar with the problem that arises when  $A$ 's budget is overspent, but the fault is  $B$ 's or  $C$ 's. Good sense and judgement are needed.

Where the interdependences are serious, a solution may be sought by the use of transfer pricing: if  $A$ 's division provides services to other parts of the business, or sells or buys goods to or from them, a price may be set upon these, to be taken into account in the financial results of both sides. Such arrangements may be effective in reducing the amount of detail control, emphasis being switched to aggregate results. The trouble with such arrangements is that they can, through the incentives they give to the managers concerned, easily lead to non-optimal results when considered in relation to their effect on the whole business.

However, some managements might consider the advantage in terms of liveliness gained by these methods to more than compensate for any loss that might be avoided with more detailed control. It may be noted that the accountant's conventional end-period valuations are a kind of inter-period transfer pricing, the manager selling, so to speak, his resources to the new period at the accountant's valuations. Like other transfer prices, their careless use can easily lead to non-optimal actions.

Conclusion

It is evident that financial control is still very much an art. The good control method is perhaps that which promotes awareness of the problems involved.

Betterment Levy – XII

by K. BUCKLEY EDWARDS

THE previous articles in this series have dealt with betterment levy under Part III of the Act, its incidence and the method of its computation. The present article and those to follow deal with the acquisition of land by the Commission both compulsorily and by agreement under Part II of the Act.

Sir Henry Wells, Chairman of the Commission, has said<sup>1</sup> that the Commission regards Part II of the Act as more important than Part III and he gave three reasons for this. First, the Commission intended to administer Part II in such a way that large and small developers would be adequately supplied with land 'in units of such size and so situated in relation to industry and services that development and redevelopment will be more economical than in the past'. Secondly, since it would be several months following a chargeable act or event before a vendor, lessor or developer knew what his liability to levy would be, the Commission intended to implement a 'middleman method' (referred to later) which invoked the Commission's powers under Part II. Thirdly, profits – including development levy – made as a result of the Commission's land trading operations went into the Land Acquisition and Management Fund (the Fund), whereas betterment levy received under Part III of the Act 'got lost in the general pool of national taxation'. The more profit the Commission could make under Part II the more it would be able in due course to help the private sector in redeveloping the so-called 'twilight areas' – and the central areas as well – where the high cost of acquisition might otherwise discourage desirable development.

Whether these aims will be achieved remains to be seen; but the practitioner will need to be acquainted with the procedures under Part II of the Act, particularly as it is envisaged that the so-called 'middleman method' will be extensively used. This is a scheme devised by the Commission itself, to which there is no specific reference in the Act. It is best illustrated by means of an example. Thus, X agrees to sell his freehold Victorian house standing in three acres of grounds to Y for £30,000, but cannot know with certainty for several months after he has signed the contract of sale what betterment levy he will be required to pay under Case A, nor can Y know with certainty what levy he will be required to pay under Case C.

Under the scheme X and Y ask the Commission, through the appropriate regional office, to buy X's property for £30,000, less a negotiated and agreed amount of betterment levy. Y asks the Commission to resell at £30,000, whatever reservations that may connote. In order to come in as 'middleman' the Commission acquire the land by a 'general vesting declaration' under section 9 following a voluntarily accepted compulsory purchase order.

The main advantage of this scheme to the Commission would appear to be that they keep the levy in their own pocket instead of handing it over to the Exchequer, as they would under Part III of the Act. The vendor will presumably be able to find out what levy he will have to pay under the scheme before he commits himself to sell; but if, having approached the Commission as a possible seller, he then decides not to sell, will he be confronted with a compulsory purchase order? In the case of the purchaser, will the Commission always sell to him at the price it buys from the vendor? If it does, the intervention of the Commission will not, apparently, affect market values, whereas the presence of a large buyer in the market in the shape of the Commission might send up the price of land ripe for development. If the Commission does not sell to Y at the price it buys from X, Y will be better off without the scheme.

It is said that as part of the scheme the Commission can agree with Y that if he starts development within two years of the purchase he will not be assessed for levy under Case C. But Y can probably secure this immunity independently of the scheme. Whatever the merits of the 'middleman' scheme – and a good deal more information is needed concerning it – the Commission's powers of acquiring land under Part II are some of the fullest and most drastic yet conferred on a public authority in peace time. These powers will now be considered in some detail.

Acquisition of land

Since April 6th, 1967, the Commission have had power to acquire by agreement or (subject to what is said later) compulsorily any land, or any interest in or right over land, which is suitable for material development, and also any contiguous or adjacent land which is required for the purpose of executing works to facilitate the development or use of the other land. It is not necessary that the land should be needed for material development but merely that it should be suitable for such development. The Commission may thus acquire land suitable for material development in advance of requirements, and the Chairman of the Commission has indicated that this will be done. The Commission can, of course, buy land before its value as land ripe for development has risen in the open market, but since the Commission are required, in general, to sell at market value, this may confer no particular benefit on a prospective private developer. Reference has already been made to what constitutes 'material development' but further particulars are contained in the Material Development Regulations 1967.

To acquire land compulsorily one or more of the following conditions must be fulfilled on the date on which the compulsory purchase order is made:

- (a) planning permission, including outline planning permission, exists for the carrying out of material development of the land and the whole or part of that development has not been carried out;
- (b) the land is defined, indicated or allocated in the current development plan (or in the planning authority's proposals for altering or adding to the plan) in the manner prescribed by the Compulsory Acquisition of Land (Development Plan) (Specification) Regulations 1967;
- (c) the land is designated by the current development plan as subject to compulsory acquisition;
- (d) the land forms part of an area designated as the site of a new town;
- (e) the land is or forms part of a clearance area.

Moreover, until a 'second appointed day' (April 6th, 1967, being the 'first appointed day'), to be appointed by the Ministers subject to affirmative resolution of both Houses of Parliament, the Commission will not have power to acquire land compulsorily except for one of the following purposes:

- (i) securing the carrying out at an early date of material development;
- (ii) securing that land is developed as a whole or as part of an area which ought to be developed as a whole;
- (iii) with the approval of the Minister or other person or persons concerned, making the land available for development or use by or for the purposes of a person or body of persons who could be authorized to acquire it compulsorily for that development or use;
- (iv) disposing of the land in accordance with section 18, that is, as a 'concessionary crownhold disposition' (infra) (section 6).

Compulsory purchase

There are two alternative procedures in connection with compulsory purchase (i) the normal procedure under section 7 and the special procedure under section 8. In the normal case the procedure broadly follows that set out in the Acquisition of Land (Authorization Procedure) Act 1946, so that an objector will have the right to a public inquiry or to be heard before a person appointed by the confirming Minister. If an objection to a compulsory purchase order prepared in draft by the Commission is made and is not withdrawn, the Commission are to give notice to that effect to the appropriate Minister and the order will not be made unless that Minister authorizes the Commission to make it. The appropriate Minister is the Minister for whom the land is being acquired or who can authorize its compulsory acquisition or the planning Minister.

Before the second appointed day the purposes for which the Commission may acquire land are as set out in section 6. After the second appointed day the Commission are not so limited, but are required by section 7 to state the reasons for the proposed acquisition which are not in any way restricted, so that the effectiveness of an objection to a draft compulsory purchase order made after the second appointed day will virtually be limited to showing that the land is not suitable for the proposed future use or development by the Commission as shown by the reasons given for its acquisition.

The normal procedure following upon the confirmation of a compulsory purchase order would be the service of a notice to treat by the acquiring authority upon the owner of interests in the land to be acquired, and only those interests would be acquired. The Commission are not required to serve a notice to treat, save in the circumstances mentioned in section 10 (3) (a) which relate to minor tenancies and long tenancies which are about to expire; but under the general vesting declaration procedure authorized by section 9 all the interests in the land, save minor tenancies and long tenancies which are about to expire, vest in the Commission automatically. For this reason the notice of the making by the Commission of a compulsory purchase order (which is required by paragraph 6 of Schedule 1 to the 1946 Act) is to contain a statement of the effect of a general vesting declaration and an invitation to the persons upon whom it is served to give details of their interest in the land (section 7).

The special procedure

If at any time within the period of five years beginning with the first appointed day (April 6th, 1967) it appears to the appropriate Minister that it is necessary in the public interest to enable the Commission to obtain authority for the compulsory acquisition of land by the special procedure, the Minister may by order made before the end of the five-year period (which will be subject to annulment by a resolution of either House of Parliament) direct that the provisions of Schedule 2 to the Act shall have effect.

Such an order must specify a class of acquisitions to which it is to apply, which may be defined by reference to the locality of the land, the development proposed to be carried out, the use to which the land is to be put, the period within which the acquisition is to take place, or any other considerations (so that there is no limit to the definition of the specified class of acquisitions to which the special procedure is to apply) but it may not be applied to land:

- (a) which is the property of a local authority or which has been acquired by a statutory undertaker for the purpose of its undertaking;
- (b) which forms part of a common or open space or is held inalienably by the National Trust; or
- (c) is, or is the site of, an ancient monument or other object of archaeological interest.

Relaxation of provisions of 1946 Act

Where an order has effect, the provisions of the 1946 Act relating to the service of notices will be considerably relaxed and the confirming Minister will not be required to hold a public local inquiry or to afford to an objector an opportunity of appearing before and being heard by a person appointed by the Minister for the purpose, unless in the circumstances of the case the Minister considers it expedient to do so. The reason for this special procedure is said to be the fear that betterment levy may result in a mass withholding of development land by landowners which the normal compulsory purchase procedure would be too slow to deal with.

There is a precedent for the special procedure in section 2 of the 1946 Act which, however, was intended to operate for a period of five years only, to deal with urgent cases in the aftermath of the war. The Minister has said that any order bringing in the special powers will be temporary, but there is nothing in the Act to confirm this. Indeed, section 8 (5) empowers the Minister to extend the five-year period by order subject to approval by resolution of both Houses of Parliament (section 8).

Sections 9 and 10 prescribe a quick form of procedure for taking title to land which is being compulsorily acquired. After a lapse of two months from the publication of notice confirming the compulsory purchase order by the Minister, or such longer period as may be prescribed by the order, the Commission may execute a declaration vesting the land in themselves as from the end of such period as may be specified in the declaration. This period must not be less than twenty-eight days from the date of service of a notice specifying the land and stating the effect of the declaration (i) on every occupier of the land, other than land in which there subsists a minor tenancy or a long tenancy which is about to expire; and (ii) on every other person who has notified the Commission under section 7 (5) (b) that he claims compensation in respect of the land or some interest in the land. Section 26 (3) defines a 'minor tenancy' as a tenancy from year to year or for a year or less, and a 'long tenancy which is about to expire' as a tenancy of such duration, but longer than one year, as may be specified in the declaration (section 9). In substance the provisions of section 9 are similar to those contained in section 75 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1962, which has effect when the compulsory purchase order directs expedited completion.

When the general vesting declaration becomes effective, a notice to treat will be deemed (saving exceptions) to be served on the date on which the declaration was made on every person on whom the Commission could have served such notice, and the Commission will be entitled to enter upon and take possession of the land before the lengthy procedure involved in the assessment and payment of compensation has been completed. This involves a radical departure from the procedure under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, which requires the service on owners of notices to treat with a view to ascertaining the amount of compensation, and provides for the transfer of ownership not to take place until the compensation has been assessed and paid.

Where, however, the land is subject to a minor tenancy or a long tenancy which is about to expire, the Commission cannot enter upon the land without serving (i) a notice to treat in respect of that tenancy, and (ii) a notice upon every occupier of any of the land in which the tenancy subsists stating that at the end of a specified period (which must not be less than fourteen days from the date on which the notice is served) the Commission intend to enter upon and take possession of the land. The vesting of the land in the Commission will then be subject to the tenancy until that period expires or the tenancy comes to an end, whichever first occurs. Further provisions relating to vesting declarations are contained in Schedule 3.

Registration and revocation

A compulsory purchase order and the revocation of a compulsory purchase order must be registered in the Register of Local Land Charges in England and in the General Register of Sasines in Scotland. Where a compulsory purchase order is made by the Commission in respect of land in England and Wales it will be the duty of the Commission, as soon as may be after:

- (a) the order is made; or
- (b) in consequence of any proceedings the order is quashed in respect of all or any part of the land comprised in the order; or
- (c) the order is revoked by the Commission in respect of all or any part of that land; or

(d) by virtue of section 4 of the Compulsory Purchase Act 1965 (under which the powers of the Commission cannot be exercised after the expiration of three years from the making of the compulsory purchase order) the powers exercisable in pursuance of the order cease to be exercisable in respect of all or any part of the land, to give notice of the event in question to the proper officer of any council by whom the order is required to be registered in the Local Land Charges Register.

A compulsory purchase order made by the Commission may be revoked by the Commission in respect of all or any part of the land comprised in the order; but any such revocation will not affect:

- (a) the previous operation of the order or anything done under it before the revocation; or
- (b) any right or liability accrued or incurred before the revocation; or
- (c) the institution, continuance or enforcement after the revocation of any proceedings or remedy in respect of any such right or liability (section 11).

Taxation and Inflation

ONE aspect of inflation that has received relatively little attention until recently is the impact that it has on the effective rate of tax on incomes. By and large inflation, by raising the nominal value of salaries and wages while leaving their real value unchanged, will gradually move people into higher tax brackets and increase the percentage of income absorbed by tax. Unless personal allowances and reduced rate reliefs are increased at the same rate as inflation (a phenomenon not so far apparent), unchanged tax rates will inevitably mean a growing burden of taxation. This increased burden will be the greater where inflation pushes the nominal value of incomes through a series of increasing marginal rates of tax.

An article in a contemporary some months ago<sup>1</sup> illustrated the effect that this may have on typical earnings levels. For example, if earnings had merely kept pace with inflation and the tax rates had remained unchanged, a married man with two children who was earning £750 per annum ten years ago would have had 0.3 per cent of his income taken in tax. Today, that percentage would be 6 per cent of the equivalent income in real terms. A man earning £1,500 ten years ago paid 13.5 per cent of his income in tax. Today that figure is 18.7 per cent of the equivalent income.

A more startling illustration of the effect of inflation on income was given more recently in The Financial Times<sup>2</sup> in a short article headed 'Beeching-style salaries?' This questioned whether the salaries of £24,000 for National Steel Corporation executives compared with that paid to Lord Beeching by British Railways in 1961. The answer to this question is an emphatic 'no'. The article then went on to show that in the tax year 1965-66, a single man would have had to earn £90,365 in order to receive the same purchasing power as £24,000 would have provided in 1961. The details of this calculation are as follows:

	1961-62		1965-66
	£	£	£	£
Gross salary ..		24,000		90,365
Tax: income tax ..	8,590		36,502
surtax ..	7,187		40,370
10 per cent sur-charge ..	—		4,037
		15,777		80,909
After-tax income ..		£8,223		£9,456

Between 1961-62 and 1965-66, the retail price index increased by 15 per cent, therefore the after-tax income of £9,456 in 1965-66 has the same purchasing power as the £8,223 in 1961-62.

Clearly, the impact of inflation on the effective level of taxation is severe at all levels of income, and from the nature of the tax structure one can deduce that this impact is likely to be the most severe when it pushes income through the reduced rate reliefs to the standard rate, and again when it pushes income through the increasing rates of surtax.

The severity of these effects is such as to warrant a much more detailed investigation of the precise impact on different sections of the community, and of the long-term effects that it may have on the incentive to work and the remuneration pattern generally. Without an appreciation of the social and economic consequences of changes in the burden of taxation, efforts to improve efficiency and productivity in the business may well be frustrated.

Education for the Accountant

Specialist or broad brush?

by E. C. D. EVANS, B.Sc.(Econ.), F.A.C.C.A., A.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M.
Director of Accountancy Studies, Slough College

AMONGST a number of considerations in these changing times in the accountancy world is the nature of education for the future accountant. What subjects should he study? To what extent should he be a specialist?

Changes in syllabuses have already been made and undoubtedly others will be made to get away from stereotyped learning. A ready-made single pattern answer to a business problem is rarely encountered. Life would be much more simple if this were so but the realities are quite different and any education scheme has to take into account that an accountant has to make decisions and must be able to assess what a line of policy should be in relation to the circumstances. Even within the confines of a known and limited position a decision as to what to do depends on the interpretation of that position and the merits of the different end results. A few examples serve to illustrate this:

- (a) What are the economics of: (1) Moving to a new site. (2) Setting up a new distribution centre. (3) Launching a new product?
- (b) What interest rate should be used in assessing profitability on capital projects?
- (c) Is an internal audit system required? Should there be an O. & M. section? Should the internal audit and O. & M. be combined?
- (d) Should a documentation process be manual or mechanized?
- (e) What method of recovering overheads should be used? Should standard costing be extended to overheads and how far?
- (f) How should head office expenses be charged out to divisions or subsidiaries?

An intelligent person accumulates experience and acquires expertise over his working life; but without the means to accelerate this process it is very many years before sufficient knowledge is acquired to deal adequately with complex issues. The requirement is to reduce considerably this time scale. This is the function of education; that is, to take practical situations and by analysis discover the underlying reasoning so that principles and procedures can be established so that they can be presented in a form for ready assimilation and comprehension.

Thus the function of education is to reduce the inevitably tangled real-life situations to the common denominator of theory; and once a student fully understands the significance of the theory he is then able to proceed to problem-solving in order that later he can apply his knowledge to the particular situations which he himself will meet.

The questions arise – What is the best way to do this? – What does the accountancy student need to learn?

The subject-matter which an accountancy student needs to study for qualification may be placed in three categories:

- (a) That which he requires as background to back up and put into better perspective other knowledge.
- (b) Subjects in which he requires a good, but not necessarily expert, knowledge.
- (c) Professional or technical subjects in which he will have to attain proficiency. Which subjects should be studied and in which category they should be placed is a major question. One arrangement could be:

(1) Background

Sociology: social behaviour; structure of society; relationships.

Communication: media; discussion; negotiation; committee work.

Economic history.

General principles of law.

(2) A good knowledge

Report writing: written communication.

Mathematics: particularly for business calculations, e.g. operational research techniques.

Business practices and equipment.

Computer technology: systems analysis.

Industrial organization, production and marketing.

Principles of economics.

(3) A thorough knowledge

Specialist group I	Financial accounting (including auditing). Taxation. Mercantile, industrial and company law.
Specialist group II	Business statistics. Management accounting, applied economics and costing.

Subject heads do little to indicate the coverage. The important thing is that the trainee accountant should be educated in line with modern practice and what can be discerned will be required ten/twenty years hence. To allow time for new topics syllabuses will have to be pruned in those areas which are infrequently used, and also those which follow a routine pattern and are ready to hand in reference books.

How far should an accountant be a specialist? An employer pays for knowledge and the ability to perform a particular function. The greater the degree of proficiency the more valuable is the service. This can only come from a thorough knowledge of the subject . . . and this means professionalism and specialization. Specialization does NOT mean a limited knowledge in a narrow field. In medical circles a 'specialist' is consonant with the top of the profession. What specialization does call for is a thorough knowledge in a particular field – which will also require a good knowledge of all ancillary and peripheral subjects . . . to make possible that specialization.

Definable specialist accountancy fields which seem to have emerged are taxation; management accounting, management auditing and consultancy; legal accounting and statutory auditing; computer and machine systems; and public service accounting. Others may exist or emerge.

Few accountants will need, or be able, to embrace all specialisms during working life. Perhaps the order of things will be to study one specialist field in depth, say either Group I or II in the foregoing, as part of the preparation for a qualification (by means of an optional concluding part of the finals?); and then to add, if desired, other specialisms by post-qualification studies – possibly to obtain a further diploma or an endorsement to the original qualification.

Since early times money has been the accepted medium for measuring an organization's position and progress. Today the complexities of modern society and ramifications of industry call for highly trained financial executives, advisers and business managers. Sir Henry Benson, C.B.E., F.C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, in the course of an address at a recent function (reported in The Accountant) stated: 'While there would still be plenty of scope for the general practitioner, the future would call for more and more specialists in one or other of the many fields the profession had to cover'. It would be presumptuous in an article to attempt to specify any precise form of future accountancy education. The foregoing may contribute a few ideas.

Computers for Management

by G. J. MORRIS and H. S. WOODGATE.

B.B.C. Publications, London. 8s 6d.

This booklet has been published in connection with the series of TV programmes which commenced on B.B.C. 2 on May 15th. In the brief compass of sixty-two pages, the authors have produced an exceedingly comprehensive survey of the basic philosophy of utilizing the computer for business purposes, the hardware and software in use, illustrations of typical uses of the computer in management planning and control, and the organization of the computer department. The scope of the book is confined to business applications and excludes purely scientific and mathematical computation.

Written primarily for people unfamiliar with computers, the booklet describes in very simple terms the contribution that the computer can make to routine clerical operations and management processes, illustrating the relevance of the basic characteristics of the computer to the type of operation to be performed. The computer itself is described in simple terms, with particular reference to techniques in retrieving information for the computer to process. Although some of the steps in programming are outlined, programming as such is not dealt with.

The examples of applications which are dealt with in some detail are in the fields of stock control and invoicing, and in production control and project planning and evaluation. The method of treatment of the examples is not designed to show the detailed operation of the program, but concentrates upon the significance of the application to management. The section on resource planning is particularly useful in this respect.

For the accountant or manager not familiar with the computer, this booklet is invaluable in giving, in a brief space, an overall view of what the computer is and how its special characteristics can be used in the management of the business.

Presentation of The Accountant Annual Awards for 1967

THE ACCOUNTANT Annual Awards for 1967 for company reports and accounts were presented by The Rt Hon. the Earl of Cromer, P.C., M.B.E., at Merchant Taylors' Hall, London, on May 25th, in the presence of a large and distinguished company representing the City, the professions, commerce and industry. Mr Percy F. Hughes, Editor-in-Chief of The Accountant, presided, and also on the platform were the representatives of the winning companies, Mr Raymond P. Brookes, Chairman of Guest, Keen and Nettlefolds Ltd, and Mr E. Fawcett, M.I.MECH.E., Managing Director of Alenco Ltd, together with Sir Henry Benson, C.B.E., F.C.A., President, The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales; Professor David S. Anderson, M.A., C.A., President, The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland; Mr N. V. Hogan, B.A., B.COM., F.C.A., President, The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland; Mr J. P. Landau, F.A.C.C.A., President, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants; Mr C. E. Sutton, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., President, The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants; Mr R. Partington, F.I.M.T.A., A.C.I.S., President, The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants; Mr C. Hilary Scott, President, The Law Society, and a Member of the Panel of Judges of The Accountant Annual Awards; Mr Roy Borneman, Q.C., Chairman of the Panel of Judges, and the following members of the Panel: The Hon. J. F. H. Baring, Messrs A. S. H. Dicker, M.B.E., F.C.A., J. A. Hunter, M.B.E., T.D., J. A. Jackson, F.C.A., Ian T. Morrow, C.A., F.C.W.A., Arthur E. Webb, Editor, The Accountant, and Peter Chapman, Secretary of The Accountant Annual Awards.

The names of those who accepted invitations appear on other pages.

THE CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS

Opening the proceedings, Mr Hughes said:

'I am delighted once again to be able to welcome you to the presentation of The Accountant Annual Awards, and it is with a deep sense of privilege that I express my thanks to the Master and Wardens of the Merchant Taylors' Company for their kindness in permitting us to use this very beautiful Hall today.

'We are greatly honoured by the presence of Lord Cromer who will shortly make the presentations for 1967 and I would express to you, Lord Cromer, my very warm appreciation of your kindness in so readily accepting my invitation to make these presentations today. It would take far too long for me to give you any worth-while account of his many achievements in a very distinguished career of service to the City of London, and I am sure that it would be embarrassing to him, but it is given to very few to hold the office of the Governor of the Bank of England, which he relinquished quite recently, and he has returned to his family merchant bank, Baring Brothers. Barings have been in the forefront of city business life for a very long time and we are particularly grateful for the fact that we have been fortunate to have had as members of the Panel two of the managing directors, first Mr A. W. Giles and, more recently, the Hon. J. F. H. Baring, who is a member of the Panel at the present time.

'This is the fourteenth occasion on which these Awards have been presented and your presence today is yet a further indication of the support which Baring Brothers have given us over the years. Earlier this week it was announced that Lord Cromer had been asked to consider what might be done to increase Britain's exports of major capital projects and that he is engaged in talks designed to promote such exports. We wish him well in this new task.'

Tribute to the Panel of Judges

'Our Panel of Judges has again had a difficult task in making its selection and my thanks are due to Mr Roy Borneman, Q.C., for all that he has done as Chairman of the Panel for the third year. I know that he has been most ably supported by the other members, who this year were Mr R. Adams, C.A., The Hon. J. F. H. Baring, Mr W. G. Campbell, B.A., F.C.A., Mr A. S. H. Dicker, M.B.E., F.C.A., Mr J. A. Hunter, M.B.E., T.D., Mr J. A. Jackson, F.C.A., Mr Ian T. Morrow, C.A., F.C.W.A., Mr Hilary Scott, and Mr Arthur Webb, Editor of The Accountant. It is unusual for me to refer to individual members because they work together as a very fine team but I think that the circumstances are exceptional this year. I would refer first to the fact that Mr A. S. H. Dicker has completed a period of ten years of service with the Panel, which is an all-time record and I would express to him my most grateful thanks.

'Mr W. G. Campbell is not with us today, owing to the fact that he is in hospital and to him I would send my very best wishes for an early and complete recovery. Mr Hilary Scott has been a member of the Panel for several years and he is just completing what must have been a very strenuous year as President of The Law Society. It is perhaps too late to offer him my congratulations on this presidential appointment but it is not too late to express my pleasure that he has come through this year as the head of his profession apparently unscathed and has still found it possible to assist our Panel.

'Mr Peter Chapman has been the Secretary to the Panel of Judges since the scheme began and I know that they appreciate the efficient way in which he carries out his duties.

'Once again we are fortunate in having with us the representatives of so many professional bodies, and in particular Sir Henry Benson, C.B.E., F.C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, Professor David S. Anderson, M.A., C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, Mr N. V. Hogan, B.A., B.COM., F.C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland, Mr J. P. Landau, F.A.C.C.A., President of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, Mr R. Partington, F.I.M.T.A., A.C.I.S., President of The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants and Mr C. E. Sutton, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., President of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants.

Mr Raymond P. Brookes, Chairman of Guest, Keen and Nettlefolds, with Sir Henry Benson, C.B.E., F.C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, and Lady Benson.

It is a matter of great satisfaction to us that the presidents as individuals and the bodies which they represent take so keen and lively an interest in The Accountant Annual Awards.'

Remarkable improvement in financial reporting

'The Annual Awards were introduced by my predecessor, Ronald Staples, to foster and encourage improvements in financial reporting so that the investing public would have prompt and reliable information, not only that which must by law be supplied but also that which the best modern practice demands. Since 1954, improvements have been, I feel, quite remarkable and I hope that no matter what changes the new Companies Act may require, improvements will continue to be made in the standard of accounts which the investing public is entitled to expect, not by law but because all concerned recognize that it is good that it should be so.

'I would offer to Guest, Keen and Nettlefolds Ltd and Alenco Ltd my warm congratulations on their success. As those of you who have been to this function before know, there is no distinction between the Awards, both being of equal merit. The effort which goes into the preparation of the accounts of the winning companies is considerable and I congratulate the teams of these two companies, who have been responsible for the accounts which the Panel of Judges has considered supreme this year.' (Applause.)

LORD CROMER PRESENTS THE AWARDS

'Mr Hughes, ladies and gentlemen. Let me, first of all, thank you, sir, very much indeed for your kind and friendly words of welcome to me here today.

'It is, of course, to me a great honour to be invited to present these Awards, perhaps all the greater an honour from the fact that I am a banker, because whatever qualities bankers may claim for themselves, they scarcely claim to be the forerunners in the production of outstandingly forthcoming annual accounts. (Laughter.) As a banker, I must say that I make no particular apology for this state of affairs and, indeed, in the specialist and somewhat esoteric field of international banking, I am a protagonist of "no change". Evolution in every field of life needs to be based on self-interest, both national and individual, rather than on any form of edict based on facile argument unsupported by a great deal of experience in the field.

'But we are not met here today to discuss banking accounts. We are here to discuss the winning reports and to pay our respects to the performance of those in other fields of endeavour who, in the furtherance of their proper interests, have earned the prizes which I have the privilege to present.

'It has often seemed to me, sir, that in our contemporary society one of the greatest problems is the question of communication - communication of ideas, of information and of knowledge. The failure certainly does not lie in the mechanical links which exist and are more widespread and more refined than at any time in man's history. The failure seems to lie in the ability to express ideas or information in a form that is readily intelligible and acceptable to the recipient. In a free enterprise society based on the continuing investment of private capital, clear, lucid and comprehensible annual accounts are, in my belief, a vital element in communication between a company and its stockholders and every bit as important between a company and its employees.

Not so very many years ago it was the common practice for profit and loss accounts to introduce the word "profit" as early as possible in the tabulation. The figure shown against the word "profit", which was frequently the largest figure on the page, was then seized upon by the ignorant and occasionally by the malicious as a measure of profits being made. The smaller print, showing further deductions for interest payable, taxation and the like, made less impact on the eye of the unwary, so that it was only the serious and the pertinacious who proceeded through the table to the really meaningful figure of net profit available for distribution, which as often as not was set out in the drearily uniform type of monotonous respectability employed throughout. But today the change in presentation of accounts which has taken place, of which the two prize-winners provide admirable examples, is, in my opinion, a very important breakthrough in communication of the truth.

Profits are not easily won, being as they are the fruits of imagination, of endeavour, countless decisions and, above all, hard work, but they should be a source of pride to all those involved in their creation. It is right, too, that shareholders and employees should both equally be able to learn from the accounts how in general terms the profits are made up in which they can see to some degree their respective contributions, and equally their dependence on the contributions made by others, such as those, for instance, who supply the raw materials or semi-manufactured products. It is, I believe, important, too, that shareholders and employees should be aware of the taxation which is levied on the fruits of their efforts and be left in no doubt on this score of the contribution they are making to society. This, I think, is particularly important when every job in industry today calls for such a substantial investment in plant and machinery. It takes a lot of investment today, and in the future I would suggest it is going to take considerably more to provide every job opportunity.

The production of accounts which tell the story in financial terms of the year's trading of an undertaking in a clear, lucid manner is, in my belief, a vital and fundamental contribution to an understanding of how the capitalist system works and to an understanding of the interdependence of those who work on the workshop floor and those who provide the capital. In my belief, sir, the greater the degree that these two come together to be one and the same, the greater will be the growth of prosperity in this country and the greater the degree of harmony in industry.

'Mr Hughes, I would like most warmly to congratulate The Accountant in inaugurating these Awards. Their influence as the years go by progressively spreads and the dissemination of knowledge in a clear and precise form, which you have set out to encourage is, as I have suggested, a very important contribution to the understanding of our economic system which is unquestionably the most efficient that the world has yet evolved.

'Finally, Mr Hughes, I would like to express appreciation of all of us here to the members of the Panel in their very difficult and, I am sure at times, invidious task, of selecting from so many fine entries those who are to receive public acclamation. Lastly, if I may, I would like to express my admiration and warm congratulations to the two prize-winners today.' (Applause.)

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS OF THE PRESENTATIONS

Acknowledging the presentation made to his company, Mr Raymond P. Brookes, Chairman of Guest, Keen and Nettlefolds Ltd, said:

'Today I am very much a "Daniel come to judgment" - I say that, however benevolent may be the lions in whose presence I find myself on this happy and, apparently, disarming occasion.

'The closer circle of my friends and intimate business associates includes, of course, many members of the accountancy profession and it is perhaps within their knowledge and experience that in terms of initial associations and friendships they may have felt themselves to be somewhat strangely handicapped by the instinctive and, of course, entirely improper prejudices under which engineers, works managers and other lesser beings susceptible to mortal weaknesses so constantly labour in the ever-increasing intimacy of their relationships with those whose life-blood is dedicated to detection, measurement and expression and presentation of fact – and I speak with feeling! (Laughter.)

'In the hard school of experience they who are moulded of more humble clay have learned that truths, apparently inescapable and fundamental on the workshop floor, are not infrequently seen to be suspect and dangerous mental aberrations when subjected to the disciplines of their ultimate assessors whose standards and whose accepted competence dominate life and, dare I also now say, dominate death?

'Life itself is indeed a pill which few can bear to swallow without a little gilding.'

And we engineers and workshop men tend to love a little gilding and we don't like the removal of the sugar.

'So here I be, having travelled the full circle of a very chastening experience and having painfully digested a lot of prejudices, destined to receive on behalf of my colleagues your most gracious recognition of all our combined endeavours and indeed to do so with unalloyed pride and happiness.

'The distinction of seeking to attain and thereafter zealously to maintain high accounting standards must in our company be accorded to William Fea, our Financial Director, who is, I believe, a member of the Council of the Institute of Chartered Accountants, and indeed to the very close and dedicated support accorded to him over many years by William Nicol, our Administrative Director, Fred Rowbottom, Group Controller, John Howard, Group Secretary, and Trevor Holdsworth, Group Chief Accountant.

'But, of course, in support and in every way of equal importance is the fine work of all the financial executives at head office, and in the diverse G.K.N. operating companies scattered throughout the world.

'And, finally – and I say this with great sincerity – the ever-watchful, the ever-helpful presence, authority, competence and kindness of Sir Henry Benson and Mr Oliver Couse, of Cooper Brothers & Co, our auditors.

'I take special pleasure today in sharing this occasion with Oliver Couse because we have gone down the years together and it was strange that having been at school together when I think we were fourteen, we should meet in middle age in the affairs of Guest, Keen and Nettlefolds and that I should become subject to a fairly hard but always kindly and constructive taskmaster.

'Certainly, we have not consciously sought this recognition which must indeed be deserved by many others but we have aspired toward a standard of integrity in accounting reporting and presentation to meet and, indeed, endeavour to anticipate the properly exacting requirements of the professional institutions, the Stock Exchange and, above all, the established reputation of British business as a whole – and we have always sought to be mindful of the rights of our shareholders upon whose respect (and I use that word advisedly) affection and faith we in G.K.N. are ultimately totally dependent.

'These ever-present disciplines are vital to the continuing health of our company of whose history and future we who lead are the temporary, but privileged and, I hope, responsible custodians.

'To you, Mr Hughes, to you, Mr Webb, our appreciation for the stimulus provided by this magnificent Award and to you, Mr Borneman and your colleagues on the Panel of Judges, our gratitude for the considerable dedication of your efforts.

'My prayer, of course, must be that our results may one day match your assessment of the excellence of their recording and indeed that the frustrations under which we presently labour may, in the full relevance of time be seen to be as "fleeting and unpredictable as an English summer".

'For the present we must content ourselves with the thought that there seems to have been:

"Some merit in putting a handsome face upon indigent circumstances."

'Again our gratitude and appreciation to you all from us in Guest, Keen and Nettlefolds. Thank you.' (Applause.)

Mr E. Fawcett, M.I.MECH.E., Managing Director of Alenco Ltd, in acknowledging the presentation made to his company, said:

'May I say how pleased I am to receive this Award on behalf of Alenco. I regret very much that my Chairman, Mr Jack Symes, is prevented by illness from being here today, but I know that he would have been delighted to accept this honour bestowed upon his company.'

'Mr Symes has always considered that the facts and figures contained in our annual reports should be presented in as clear a manner as possible and supported by such notes and explanations as are necessary so that all our shareholders can easily understand them.'

'On such an occasion as this I like to feel that I have made some contribution, however small, to the presentation of our report, but I am happy to acknowledge and to thank those who have been mainly responsible. Most credit must go to our Chief Accountant, Mr R. E. Burrows, and his team, and to our Financial Director, Mr S. A. Gardner. The advice and support of our auditors has always been readily available and to them we also offer our thanks. To our designer and printers we would like to say a special word of thanks for the way in which our report has been presented.'

'Last year we were extremely pleased to see quite long extracts from our report reprinted in The Accountant. Nevertheless, it came as quite a surprise to us to receive the letter informing us of our success.'

'I would like to join Mr Brookes in thanking Mr Hughes, the Panel of Judges and all those on The Accountant for their work in connection with this competition.'

'May I say once again how proud we all are at Alenco to have been selected for this Award.' (Applause.)

PANEL CHAIRMAN'S COMMENTS

Mr Roy Borneman, Q.C., Chairman of the Panel of Judges, said:

'It is my privilege now to make a few short comments on the work of the Panel this year. The number of accounts submitted was approximately the same as last year and called for a similar number of meetings. This year, however, we found it somewhat easier than usual to select the winners, although the final consideration of the surviving five or six sets of accounts in each group was lengthy. By that time, of course, those under consideration had passed the somewhat stringent accounting tests, and we paid particular attention to the impact that the accounts and the review of each company's activities were likely to have on shareholders and financial advisers. We were concerned, also, to give credit where in particular circumstances the presentation of the accounts was difficult; in short, whether the story which the company had to tell in facts and figures of itself made the presentation easier or more difficult. Above all, we looked to see whether the contribution to profits by the various activities of the company was clearly set out, and whether the return on the capital embarked in those individual activities was discernible. And that approach we propose to continue in future years.'

Mr N. V. Hogan, B.A., B.Com., F.C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland, and Mrs Hogan.

Excellent financial summary

'On occasion it is one particular feature which makes a set of accounts stand out, and it was so this year. We regarded as superb the summary of financial information over the past ten years included in Guest, Keen and Nettlefolds' accounts; not merely in what the summary contained, but also the way in which it was set out. And if you will glance at pages 14 and 15 of these winning accounts, I think you will appreciate why we took the view that the company adopted a model form in presenting the financial summary. I would also comment that the illustrations in Guest, Keen and Nettlefolds' accounts were well keyed to the text of the chairman's review, and assisted towards a real understanding of the company's manifold activities both at home and abroad.'

'Among the smaller companies, the accounts of Alenco Ltd recommended themselves particularly as setting out very clearly the salient features both of the figures and of the company's activities. The presentation assumed an intelligent reader so that the accounts were not overburdened with explanations, and the concise notes on the accounts gave all essential information.'

'In short, Mr Chairman, we thought this year's winners took their place honourably with those of earlier years.'

'May I conclude by thanking all the members of the Panel for their enthusiasm, their powers of critical analysis and their ability to put up with each other's deficiencies, particularly those of the chairman (laughter), with such good humour.'

'It will not I hope be thought invidious if I mention two names in particular. Mr Hilary Scott, in spite of his responsibilities as President of The Law Society, still found it possible to give us the advantage of his advice in later stages. And secondly, Mr Campbell, who has not enjoyed good health of latter months and so was unable to attend the final one or two meetings. But he nevertheless communicated his views to us in a most helpful manner, and his observations were all the more valuable because they were expressed unassisted, or perhaps I should say unimpeded, by the views of his colleagues.' (Applause.)

WELCOME TO THE GUESTS

Mr Arthur E. Webb, Editor of The Accountant, extended a welcome to the many guests who were present.

Executives of Guest, Keen and Nettlefolds with their company's Award. Mr W. W. Fea, B.A., F.C.A., Financial Director (centre), with Mr F. C. Rowbottom, F.C.W.A., Controller (left), and Mr G. T. Holdsworth, F.C.A., Chief Accountant.

Finance and Commerce

No fixed assets

THE layout of the balance sheets in the accounts of Sedgwick, Collins (Holdings) has been revised into summary form this year, with the detail provided in the notes. The change is decidedly for the better.

The group, through its subsidiaries, carries on business as insurance brokers and underwriting agents, and the balance sheet is notable for the absence of any reference to fixed assets. 'You will appreciate', the chairman writes to shareholders in his annual review, 'that, in a service industry such as ours, fixed assets do not have the same relevance as in a manufacturing concern.' Opportunity has been taken to eliminate the goodwill item and the excess cost of shares in subsidiaries over par value by writing off those items against capital reserves. The balance has been written off company cars used by fire and accident surveyors at home and abroad, and also the cost of a new computer.

The chairman makes the point, however, that there is a very substantial 'goodwill' attached to the business as the profits show. In addition, the company owns a valuable lease on its Regis House, London, premises. The group, incidentally, has outgrown these premises and an eighteen-year lease has been taken in a new office block. Within the next three years further additional office space may be needed.

Income by currency

An interesting feature of the 'Summary of group figures' included in the reprint is the analysis of gross income by currency. This shows that 45 per cent of income emanates from sources outside the United Kingdom and the five-year figures show an increasing proportion of income arising from sources outside North America. This is due to growth in Europe and Australia in line with the board's policy of extending the group's world-wide interests.

Income derived from commission contingent on underwriting profits of certain Lloyd's syndicates, the chairman comments, was affected by the poor results of the 1964 Underwriting Account and income from this source 'continues to be insignificant'. The 1965 underwriting figures will certainly not be better.

Although the group is clearly in the 'invisible exports' business, it is inevitably classed as a service company and is saddled with selective employment tax which cost £14,561 last year and will cost something like £45,000 this. Lloyd's Insurance Brokers' Association is making representations with a view to obtaining some relief in respect of staff employed on overseas business.

Computer

The company for many years used advanced punched-card methods which culminated four years ago in renting a 1401 Computer from I.B.M. Due to the company's expansion and the greater development possible in the use of equipment, an I.B.M. System 360 Computer was bought in January 1966 and the cost will ultimately be in the region of £250,000. After deducting the investment grant, the amount paid to date has been charged to revenue reserves as shown in Note 8 to the accounts.

For the purpose of bringing the company's issued capital into the wider-range investment scope of the Trustee Investments Act 1961, a '2 for 5' scrip issue is being made involving the capitalization of £317,628 of reserves.

At the balance sheet date, 261 institutions and nominee companies held 57 per cent of the company's ordinary capital, while directors and their families held 11 per cent through sixty-seven holdings. There were 2,129 other individual shareholdings accounting for the other 32 per cent of the shares.

Johnson Group

SHAREHOLDERS in Johnson Group Cleaners Ltd have the company's accounts in a new form this year, a much cleaner form in fact. A columnar profit and loss account opens with turnover. The requisite notes are placed to the right of the double-page opening.

Balance sheets, also columnar, show 'Sources of capital' as 'Represented by fixed and net current assets'. Notes follow, readily readable in large clear print. The accounts of Johnson Group Cleaners Properties Ltd have been extracted from the group accounts and, the chairman says, 'will be circulated under separate cover to those entitled to receive them'. This company is the group property-holding concern.

Accountants who have been caught up in Prices and Incomes Board inquiries will feel for Mr T. B. S. Johnson, the chairman, in his comments on the attack on the dry cleaning and laundry industries. A Prices and Incomes Board's investigation, Mr Johnson says, was ultimately revealed to have been based on three letters of complaint relating to dry cleaning prices received by the Board of Trade during a twelve-months period when about 150 million dry cleaning transactions took place in the country.

This action was followed by public exhortation to report to the Board of Trade price increases apparently turning on selective employment tax, and, as the result of 'statistically insignificant' complaints there was an order restraining prices. Selective employment tax, incidentally, will cost the Johnson Group £300,000 in a full year, and loss of investment allowances will cost some £50,000.

CITY NOTES

BEARS in the stock-market are traditionally glum. They may maintain that they are realists rather than pessimists, but they definitely become pessimists when the market insists on moving directly against their bearish views. It is no exaggeration to say that the bears are now 'hopping mad'.

Events, present and prospective, they maintain, do not justify the present pitch of equity prices, but as soon as that view looks like being justified, there is some new element which keeps the market up. The mere talk of possible reflationary moves as a result of pressure by the motor industry, coupled with figures from I.C.I., and Courtaulds which did not prove to be any worse than expected, were enough to put prices strongly better at the tail-end of last week.

There is clearly such a weight of money behind the equity market and clearly such a determination to insist on the reappearance of an inflationary force in the economy, that the bears, taking a direct line on earnings and dividend prospects, are persistently outweighed and outvoted.

Bears are essentially people who want to be able to say: 'I told you so'. But they can't - not while money and take-overs are talking to the present extent.

THERE is a firmly held conviction in the City that the fury of the Prices and Incomes Board's report on the banks will signify - if not nothing - then at least a little in terms of enforced revolution in banking operations. The banks have their supporters in Westminster rather than down the road towards Victoria where the Prices and Incomes Board lives. Some of the Board's recommendations may not travel well to Westminster, short though the journey is.

One strange part of the Board's report is its apparent insistence that the banks should do themselves what they already achieve to a considerable extent through subsidiaries. At a time when the joint stock banks are being accused of poaching on merchant banking preserves, the Board's criticism on this particular line seems odd - or ill-informed.

IN the year to the end of last March the market value of securities quoted on the London Stock Exchange reached a record level of £82,033 million compared with £78,164 million a year earlier. At £43,618 million, the nominal value of quoted securities was also at a record level. The gain in market value was largely achieved in fixed interest stocks.

AREDUCTION of some £30 million in the level of bank advances in the private sector in the four weeks to mid-May was, according to official comment, a matter of no real significance. And yet the failure of bank lending to get significantly on the upward move is decidedly interesting. The removal, in the Budget, of the ceiling on the level of bank advances was admittedly accompanied by a re-emphasis on lending priorities, but it has been clear enough for some considerable time that the banks are willing to be more liberal in lending and have the capacity to be so. It can only be assumed, therefore, that bank customers have neither the inclination nor the confidence to make use of the bank accommodation now more readily available.

The Private Limited Company – in Memoriam?

SIR, – Every new statute is either a criticism of the state of affairs which has developed under its predecessor or the codification of customary practices.

The exempt private limited company was created in 1907. The conversion of a family business into a limited company was a natural development and it was thought that small companies which do not issue shares or debentures to the public were entitled to preferential treatment. It was thought that the publication of details of their business, especially turnover, would make them vulnerable to take-over bids which at that time were regarded with disfavour. The small trader trading through a company was regarded as a member of the community who deserved special protection. So, he was exempt from the obligation to file a statement of the company's assets and liabilities with the Registrar of Companies and received other privileges, i.e. regarding the choice of auditors and loans to directors.

Sixty years after its creation, the exempt private limited company will be abolished or at least greatly reduced in importance. As 70 per cent of all private limited companies are exempt private companies, the private limited company as we have known it appears to be doomed. Over and above, the close company has been created by the Finance Act 1965 which places the private limited company in a particularly vulnerable position by:

- (1) the extended definition of distribution;
- (2) the restriction with regard to directors' remuneration;
- (3) the tax which has to be paid on loans to participants;
- (4) income tax and surtax payable on shortfall of distributions.

In addition, the provisions regarding capital gains tax are making it more onerous to trade through a company than as a sole trader or partner.

The change of policy must be regarded as a censure of the state of affairs which had developed. It is a disapproval of the fiscal advantages which had accrued to the taxpayer who was trading through a company: the saving of estate duty by the taxpayer who formed a company in order to spread his assets among his heirs whilst retaining full control of them and the accumulation of tax-free income which later on could be enjoyed as capital through borrowing. It has been observed that the old rule that the taxpayer was entitled to alleviate his tax position as much as he honestly could is losing its validity; and the Chancellor in his last Budget speech has foreshadowed a further comprehensive review of all tax avoidance practices.

But I think that the new provisions regarding private limited companies cannot be explained by fiscal considerations alone. The tendency of the Companies Bill is more disclosure and the modern legislator has little understanding for the desire of the business man for secrecy regarding his business. The selective employment tax is proof of the Government's disfavour of the service industries, and for these the medium of the small company is particularly suitable. Modern capitalism is altogether in favour of the elimination of small entities which are useless regarding research and technology and progress as understood in the 1960s. Modern government, in contrast to that of sixty years ago, is in favour of mergers and take-over bids. The abolition of the exempt private limited company as we have known it is one more step forward towards the organization of the economic life in accordance with the planners of modern capitalism and another sign of the end of the period of laissez-faire.

Yours faithfully,

EVA H. EHRENBURG, LL.B., LL.D., F.C.A.

New Slant on Decimal Currency

SIR, – I understand that, following the United Kingdom decision to adopt a decimal currency, there is a good deal of interest in the Australian and South African systems, where a main unit equal to 10s has been adopted.

I send you copies of the ready reckoner issued by our Taxation Department (corresponding to your Inland Revenue Department). One is the last issued in £ s d and the other the first in dollars and cents. The second is 270 per cent of the size of the first.

We get an idea of why this should be by looking at a few entries:

The tax on an income of 1,742 is	163.69
” ” ” 1,743	” 163.86
” ” ” 1,744	” 164.04
” ” ” 1,745	” 164.22

In the £ s d book, exactly the same function was performed by the following entries:

The tax on 871 is	82	0	2
” 872	” 82	3	8

Beware of a smaller main unit!

Yours faithfully,

BOB BOASE, F.A.S.A.

Carlton, Victoria, Australia.

Elements of Company Finance – III

Capital Gearing

IN the study of the elements of company or business finance one encounters the term 'capital gearing' or, as it is known in the United States, 'leverage'. These terms are used to denote the ratio between a company's ordinary share capital and its fixed interest-bearing capital – the latter including both share and loan capital, i.e. preference shares, loans or debentures, which carry a right to a fixed rate of interest.

Where a company's capital structure consists of a higher proportion of fixed interest-bearing capital than ordinary share capital it is said to be 'highly geared', while a low-g geared company is one where the ratio of ordinary share capital is high compared with the fixed interest bearing capital; examples are as follows:

Low-g geared company				£
£15,000	6 per cent Debentures	..	..	15,000
30,000	7½ per cent Preference shares of £1 each	..	..	30,000
150,000	Ordinary shares of £1 each	..	..	150,000
				£195,000

The importance of gearing in the planning of a company's capital structure cannot be over-emphasized to students. The ability of a company to carry out an even distribution policy, as well as the retention of profits for ploughing back in times when the company may be facing adverse trading conditions resulting in fluctuating profits, depend on the company's capital structure.

Before capital structure planning is briefly considered, the following example will illustrate the effects of capital gearing on distributions to ordinary shareholders in periods of fluctuating profits:

Low-g geared company				Profits £10,000 £	dividend	Profits £12,000 £	dividend	Profits £15,000 £	dividend
£15,000	6 per cent Debentures	..	..	900		900		900
30,000	7½ per cent Preference shares of £1 each	..	..	2,250		2,250		2,250
150,000	Ordinary shares of £1 each	..	..	6,850	4.6%	8,850	5.9%	11,850	7.9%
				£10,000		£12,000		£15,000
High-g geared company				£		£		£
£70,000	6 per cent Debentures	..	..	4,200		4,200		4,200
90,000	7½ per cent Preference shares of £1 each	..	..	6,750	(short by £950)	6,750		6,750
35,000	Ordinary shares of £1 each	..	..	—		1,050	3%	4,050	11.5%
				£10,950		£12,000		£15,000

In this example no account has been taken of the fact that a company would not normally distribute all the profits earned in any year but would rather retain a proportion to be carried forward to future years; however, this does not invalidate the issue. A student wishing to satisfy himself on this can quite easily add to the two examples a sum for retentions or ploughing back, and he will see that the overall position would be the same.

What we can deduce from the illustrations is, that in the high-g geared company the profit available for distribution to ordinary shareholders is subject to wider fluctuations than is the case with the company having a low-g geared capital structure.

In the high-g geared company the profits fell by 20 per cent

(£15,000 to £12,000) the rate of dividend falling by 8.5 per cent, while with a further fall of 16.6 per cent (£12,000 to £10,000) in the profits, the company would not only be unable to pay a dividend on the ordinary share capital, it would also have to draw on reserves to meet the preference dividend; or if they are cumulative preference shares, carry such liability forward and meet the unpaid preference dividends out of future profits after debenture interest but before any dividend on the ordinary shares. In the case of the company with the low-g geared capital structure the movements in the dividends were only small in relation to the variations in profits.

Again, in any small recession in trade resulting in a fall in profits, a company could be faced with a default if the fixed interest capital was high; and unpaid cumulative preference dividends might result and the final effect could be a capital reorganization scheme.

Gearing can give the ordinary shareholders a higher rate of return than the overall return on the invested capital; e.g. if the overall return on £100,000 invested capital was 9 per cent, but the prevailing rate of return required by the capital market on ordinary shares of like nature is 10 per cent and on preference shares is 6 per cent, then subject to a few simple rules which will be set out later, on the issue of a proportion of the £100,000 in preference shares, the return to ordinary shareholders can be increased. Without gearing, the company would experience difficulty in raising the required £100,000 by way of shares since no ordinary shareholders would be likely to invest sums giving a return of 9 per cent against a prevailing market rate of 10 per cent.

A method which might be considered, therefore, is to introduce into the capital structure preference shares which carry a right to a dividend of 6 per cent (the rate required by the capital market to attract investors for this type of share), the structure being as follows:

50,000 6 per cent Preference shares of £1 each	50,000
50,000 Ordinary shares of £1 each .. ..	50,000
	<hr/> £100,000

With an overall return from the invested capital by the company of 9 per cent, the additional profit arising would be £9,000, divisible as follows:

6 per cent Preference dividend .. ..	3,000
10 per cent Ordinary dividend .. ..	5,000
Carry forward .. ..	1,000
	<hr/> £9,000

When devising a company's capital structure several rules have to be borne in mind, though the student should not overlook the fact that in practice these rules can prove complex. It is suggested that those who are not content with merely learning rules in order to apply them to examination problems should obtain particulars of companies who have had a reorganization of their capital structure and follow through the principles considered. The rules in question are as follows:

- (a) The company's commitments by way of fixed annual obligations, such as debenture or loan interest and preference dividends, should not exceed 40 per cent of the profit available for distribution from a year's earnings.

- (b) Preference dividend should be covered at least three times by the company's average earnings.
- (c) Ordinary shares should be issued to finance intangible assets, such as goodwill of a business about to be purchased, trade-marks, etc.
- (d) Preference capital should be covered at least twice by the net tangible assets.
- (e) Since a company may require resources urgently on some occasion, consideration should be given to leaving a major asset free for the purpose of security for such a loan.

The student should also remember that if redeemable preference shares are under consideration for inclusion in the capital structure, the return (profits arising from the investment of the capital) should be restricted by a sum to be set aside for ultimate redemption of the redeemable preference shares, as required by the Companies Act 1948.

In recent years loan capital has been favoured by numerous companies since the cost to the company of this type of capital has been less by reason of the fact that the interest was allowable as a charge against profits in computing profits tax, as it now is for corporation tax. (Apart from this observation, the question of taxation has been omitted from this article but this does not invalidate the principles outlined.)

Practical Problems

MERCANTILE LAW

Dripp sold goods to Fandango in Spain, the price to be payable immediately. Dripp packed the goods for shipment and sent the bill of lading to Fandango. Before actually shipping the goods he heard that Fandango was insolvent. He therefore re-took and unpacked the goods - putting them back into his warehouse. Fandango had sold the bill of lading to Sancho who now claimed the goods from Dripp.

Suggested answer:

Fandango held the bill of lading, i.e. the document of title, with Dripp's permission; he can, therefore, give a good title to Sancho. Provided Sancho was a purchaser for value and bona fide, he may claim the goods. Dripp loses all rights once Fandango has passed title and goods to Sancho and cannot claim a lien. His only remedy is to sue for purchase price, but as Fandango is not solvent there is some doubt as to the success of such a claim.

HOUSING STATISTICS

Two-thirds of county boroughs and over 40 per cent of non-county boroughs and district councils are now operating rent rebate schemes according to The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants' annual return on 'Housing statistics for 1965-66', covering 961 local authorities.

There has been a gradual increase over the past five years in the number of authorities with such schemes - from 37 per cent in 1961-62 to 44 per cent in 1965-66.

The balance on the repairs account has been diminishing over recent years although expenditure on repairs has been rising by an average of 10 per cent per annum. Less than 10 per cent of local authorities now have a balance on the account equal to two years' contribution and over 44 per cent have a balance which is less than half their annual contribution to the repairs account.

One of the more encouraging aspects of housing in the country revealed by the statistics is the small percentage of authorities with problems of rent arrears for council houses. Only one authority in twenty-five has arrears amounting to the equivalent of a week's rent, and over half have arrears of less than  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent of total collectable rents.

Copies of the return are obtainable from The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants, 1 Buckingham Place, London SW1, price 20s post free.

Extracts from recent Reviews

Accountancy – August 1966

This book seems likely to be a best seller in accounting circles for many years to come. Here we have for the first time a leading firm publishing with a few changes (and those only to make it more suitable for general use) the office manual on auditing which it has developed over a long period of years and which is in daily use by its partners and audit staff... This is a practical work, not a theoretical textbook.

Certified Accountants Journal – November 1966 – AUDITING PROCEDURES

This is an outstanding work which should be well received by all those engaged in auditing... This book is one that can be recommended to all members of the auditing profession and one which, if the techniques, procedures and principles contained therein were adopted, could radically affect the whole concept of auditing, changing it from an art into a science. No auditor, therefore, of any size company can fail to agree that it is desirable to follow the text of this Manual wherever possible. Students will find it excellent as additional reading material.

A Year of Satisfactory Progress

The following is extracted from the statement by the Chairman, The Rt. Hon. Lord Sherfield, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., circulated with the report and accounts for the year ended 31st March, 1967.

The Company continued to make progress during the year, so that at the year-end the portfolio stood at £5,982,228 compared with a figure at the 31st March, 1966, of £5,096,692. Finance on offer at the end of the year was £172,750 against £546,250.

The Statement of Revenue shows income for the year before tax at £550,453, as against £508,991 for the previous year. From the sum of £610,509 available for distribution, an interim dividend of 4 per cent. was paid in December, 1966, and the Directors propose the payment of a final dividend of 6 per cent., making a total of 10 per cent. for the year on the issued and paid-up share capital at the 31st March, 1967. This dividend has been restricted in order to conform with Government policy. It compares with 11½ per cent. paid last year, which is equivalent to 10.06 per cent. on the present issued capital.

The Management fee, which, as stated last year, was under discussion with I.C.F.C. in order to arrive at a more realistic figure in relation to the services rendered to the Trust, was settled on a basis of a three-year agreement.

If the final dividend is approved, the surplus carried forward on Revenue Account will be £375,509. Revenue Surplus and Capital Surplus together will total £1,021,804.

Subject to the shareholders' approval at the Annual General Meeting, the share capital will be increased to £5,000,000, and it is proposed to utilise £400,000 from Capital Reserve for the issue of 400,000 new shares, to be allotted credited as fully paid to the shareholders in the proportion of one new share of £1 for every ten shares of £1 held on the 13th May.

A capitalisation issue of shares has been made each year since the Trust became a public company in 1962. In view of the continued growth of the Trust's revenue, it has been possible to repeat this in a rather smaller amount again this year. But it should not be assumed that a capitalisation issue will be an annual event in future. These issues have been made possible mainly, owing to the very high level of realisations reached in each year. It does not follow that a similar high level will be maintained in future years.

In the past year, new investment has been financed from realisations, and utilisation of a bank overdraft, and this pattern will continue for the time being. But, provided conditions are favourable, it is the Board's intention to raise further resources before the end of the year.

Last year my predecessor made some comment on the effect of new taxation on the Trust's business. There is nothing new to add in this respect, as no changes affecting the Trust have been made.

SIGNIFICANCE OF NEW COMPANIES BILL

This year it is the new Companies Bill which is of significance for the Trust. If it is passed into law in its present form, it is likely that the Trust will be obliged to present, with the Accounts for the year to 31st March, 1968, a valuation not only of the quoted investments, but also of the unquoted investments. Since 97 per cent. of the Trust's investments at book value are minority interests in unquoted companies, any valuation other than at cost will present your Board with a difficult problem. It should be possible to value the redeemable securities, even where there is a profit-sharing element, on a discounting basis. But minority shareholdings in private companies have no readily ascertainable market value. Profitable realisation depends in most cases on a take-over or public flotation of a company on a basis acceptable to the majority shareholding. Your Board has already begun to study the issues involved in this complex situation.

Many of the companies in which the Trust has an investment felt the effects of the decline in economic activity which took place during the year, and profits tended to fall. This trend is likely to continue into 1968.

The reduction compared with last year of the carry forward of finance on offer is not of great significance. The existing tax laws provide a continual incentive to shareholders in private companies to make timely provision against the incidence of death duties.

Organization and Management

by

C. S. DEVERELL

M.A., B.SC.(ECON.), B.COM., F.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M.

Head of the Department of Professional Studies and Business Administration
Brighton Technical College

Between 1951 and 1965 in nearly every year more than twenty per cent of young people went into clerical work. This is one of the cogent reasons for reviewing the management of our offices and the men and women who staff them.

Are our offices as effective as they could be? What is the real cost of providing office services? What is the calibre of the newcomers? How does one select them? How are they trained? What job satisfactions do they get? How can ability be recognized and rewarded?

The coming into force of the Offices, Shops and Railway Premises Act 1963 has led to a re-examination of working conditions. The implementation of the Industrial Training Act 1964 is likely to become an important issue. The selective employment tax has reinforced the need to examine costs and efficiency.

Similarly, the tempo of the revolution in the quality and quantity of information data and its processing poses equally urgent questions.

Here is a book which reviews all these problems. The author writes from a background of many years in offices and as many in professional, commercial and office education. Above all, he is concerned with the human beings at the desk and the machine.

His book will provide managerial and supervisory staff with stimulating leads on the human side of office management. Students preparing for the examinations of The Chartered Institute of Secretaries, The Institute of Office Management, The Corporation of Secretaries, the Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, and the relevant subjects of business or management diplomas in colleges will find that it contains a wealth of information attractively introduced. It is a book for the library of every training and personnel department and it complements the same author's Business Administration and Management.

This is David Newman's success story -it could be yours at Burroughs

At 23 David Newman had served five years as an articled clerk and passed his final A.C.A. examinations. He looked around for a real career opportunity, joined Burroughs and at 27 he was on a £4,000 a year income. Last year, at only 30, he was promoted Branch Manager at Wolverhampton. Exceptional? By no means. Burroughs always promote from within.

If you're between 22-30, with the ability to communicate ideas fluently this could be the career you have been looking for. As a Consultant Representative you would deal with your own clients at management level, advising them on business systems and financial matters. Here your special knowledge of accountancy could help considerably—and prove very rewarding. Among the new systems you would help to introduce would be the remarkable Burroughs ABC accounting machine which converts from sterling to decimals and back again at the flick of a switch. Burroughs will train you stage by stage starting at not less than your present salary.

Interested? Then write, giving full details, to Mr. J. A. R. Dakin, Personnel Manager, Dept. ACM26, Burroughs Machines Ltd., Heathrow House, Bath Road, Cranford, Hounslow, Middx. SKYport 6522.

Our advertising people had this idea for making you remember our name. We shot it down.

When it comes to making you remember our name, there are no lengths to which our agency wouldn't go. With their own brand of realism, they observe that remembering our name is what counts—especially when you're looking round for a good, safe investment at 4½% income tax paid! But just thinking about us isn't enough. We want you to think of us as the very special building society that we undoubtedly are—big enough to make your investment absolutely secure, electronically automated to provide a super-efficient service yet human enough to treat you as a person rather than a number. Even sky-writing isn't likely to convince you of all that—but a talk with your local Leicester Permanent branch manager might!

POST OF THE WEEK

'He who wishes to assume command must learn to be commanded.'

A slight paraphrase, perhaps, but one which fits here. For what we seek is an assistant company secretary who will already have rendered faithful service and is ready to assume command of a large portion of the department's responsibilities.

The client is a large and diversified commercial enterprise mainly engaged in storage and wharfage. The head office is in the City of London.

The successful candidate will be either A.C.A., A.C.I.S., or both. The faithful service mentioned above will be at least 5 years' experience in commerce or industry during which he will have given evidence of exceptional ability and leadership capabilities. For this he will be able to command a salary of up to £3,000 p.a. and prospects to match his calibre.

Applications in confidence to:
David J. Wilkinson.

TASK FORCE

We wish to recruit our own staff of qualified accountants and semi-seniors for temporary work. Age is immaterial, but successful applicants will have above-average personalities and ability. Man to see: Brian W. Danes.

Techniques of Communications in Business

by C. S. DEVERELL, M.A., B.Sc.(Econ.), B.COM., F.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M.

Most of us concerned in business, industry, public administration or training would like to write and speak more effectively, whatever the level of our present attainment. We have to interview, write reports, attend conferences and discussion groups, speak at meetings, and get the most we can from suggestion schemes. We are equally aware that the complexities of business today call for skill and training, if shortcomings in communication are to be removed. This book will be of inestimable service to managerial and professional students, but it is more than a textbook. It is a practical guide, with all its examples drawn from business. It should also stimulate those engaged in industrial and commercial training. The author believes that one of the most obstinate difficulties we face is that of maintaining a high level of freshness, enthusiasm and creativity. How can we make certain that the right information reaches the right people in the right form at the right time? Has the exercise of the techniques of communication been given sufficient prominence in executive training programmes? This book is above all a review and an opportunity for personal stocktaking. All managers should find something in its pages which they can profitably read.

What is a Luncheon Voucher really worth?

Don't take it at its face value. The intrinsic worth of the Luncheon Voucher Scheme is something no responsible employer can afford to overlook. And the employer who gives Luncheon Vouchers is investing only a little for a very big return. This is a Welfare Scheme that provides an incentive to both existing and prospective staff—any staff—from shop workers to executives. It ensures them a mid-day meal—and their vouchers cost them nothing. Even just 8/- a day helps towards paying for lunch. Over 13,000 restaurants in the British Isles accept Luncheon Vouchers. Benefits to the employer are many—nearly 10,000 employers, large and small, have discovered this fact. These benefits are given in detail in the Luncheon Vouchers brochure. They are all worth considering.

Save yourself a packet

call in MODERN TELEPHONES

Good staff are not cheap. And they're getting more expensive. Are you making the most of yours? Wasted time and inefficiency can almost always be traced to poor internal communications. They can cost you far more than just a pay packet.

Modern Telephones can help you achieve greater efficiency for less outlay, simply by supplying the right system for your particular needs.

Many subscribers tell us that their Modernphone system more than pays for itself in time alone (an internal call can cost fractions of a penny and save your operator's time). Expanding business can be handled without additional staff. And there's no capital outlay or maintenance charge.

Debtor Verification

IT is often and rightly emphasized that responsibility for the financial records, the financial accounts derived therefrom and the methods of internal financial control of a company rests with its directors. While this principle is generally accepted, there are irritating instances in practice where certain tasks tend to get shifted on to the broad shoulders of the auditors. An extreme case of this reprehensible form of delegation is the client – or client's staff – who does not look long for a difference in the trial balance because 'the auditors are sure to find it'. Another is making the unwarranted assumption that if the sum total of the debtor balances agrees with the balance shown by the control accounts then all is well and the auditors will pick up any mistakes either when checking the postings or circularizing debtors.

In a short new Statement on Auditing dealing with the verification of debtor balances, just issued by the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and reproduced on other pages, it is pointed out that the auditor's decision to ask a client to make a test circularization of debtors should not be regarded as an assumption by the auditor of the directors' duties. Circularization, the Council stresses, is essentially an act of the client and it is he who must authorize his customers to disclose the required information to his auditors.

The statement goes on to discuss the mechanics of this form of verification, the intensity of which should be directly related to the degree of strength or weakness inherent in the internal control system in operation and, also, to the element of error disclosed in the basic records by the application of standard auditing routines. The Council refers to two methods of verification – the positive, in which the debtor is asked to confirm the accuracy of the balance shown or to state his grounds for disagreement; and the negative, in which he is asked to reply only if he does not agree the amount. Clearly, the first of these methods is preferable if the client's records are suspect.

Among the useful precepts which the Council gives are – the sample chosen should be drawn from a complete list of debtor accounts (including those with nil balances) and with special reference to accounts with long-standing balances and accounts containing write-offs during the period; a copy of the customer's account as shown in the client's records (for the appropriate period) should be sent; and, where the positive method of verification is used, every effort should be made to 'chase' customers who do not reply.

Finance Bill in Committee

A REFRESHING change in the committee stage of the Finance Bill this year is the paucity of Government amendments or second thoughts. An obvious error in the group relief provisions was corrected by inserting the word 'applying' before 'the fraction' in paragraph 6 (2) (b) of Schedule 10. The Government also undertook to look again at some of the group relief provisions.

Admitting that the new provisions were a compromise between the old grouping system for profits tax and the later subvention provisions, the Chief Secretary, Mr JACK DIAMOND, F.C.A., spoke in support of the new provisions. He was asked to agree to a change under which the claiming company could make a payment to the surrendering company with consequent effect on the tax position, and he promised to look into it. One of his arguments for the superiority of the proposed new system over the old subvention payment system was that the old system involved the surplus company in paying money to the deficit company. He said that this raised difficulties in relation to minority shareholders who might object to such a payment to a company in which they had no interest. However, Mr DIAMOND did not deal with the question of minority holders objecting to their company surrendering the tax loss, and the tax which goes with it, to a company in which they had no interest. There does not seem to be any real distinction between the two.

An Opposition spokesman argued that, where a company was owned by a consortium, the members of that consortium ought to be able to obtain an appropriate share of the losses. He said that because of the absence of relief at present, consortia frequently entered into an ad hoc partnership rather than set up a company to carry on the joint venture. He said this preserved the right to loss relief but involved unnecessary complications. Mr DIAMOND, without making any promises, said that the Government would take another look at this point.

Mr DIAMOND also gave an explanation of the new provision that in deciding whether or not one company is a subsidiary of another, no regard was to be paid to shares held by the holding company if they constituted trading stock in the hands of that company. It fell into two parts. He said that the holding of shares by a share-dealing company might be a mere fluke and not part of the build-up of a group. Furthermore, if the holding company got relief for the subsidiary's losses through the group relief provisions, it might benefit twice over because the subsidiary's loss would be reflected in a fall in the value of its own share capital and therefore in the value of the trading stock of the holding company.

An amendment was made to clause 21 which restricts the relief for farming, etc., losses. To the definition of 'prior period of loss' in clause 21 (4) were added the words 'and in applying this definition to a chargeable period of a company "losses" means losses computed without regard to capital allowances'.

The object was to ensure that losses incurred by a company in years prior to the year of claim are all calculated on the same basis. Another amendment was made to correct a possible doubt about the interpretation of the clause. It was designed, according to Mr DIAMOND, to meet the case where a hobby farmer has operated through a company for part of the five years in question – part of the five years before the year of claim – and in a partnership or on his own account for the other part of the five years. Without it there would have been some doubt as to the manner in which the accounts should be prepared and figures calculated.

Schedule 11 which contains detailed amendments of the corporation tax provisions was also the subject of some Government amendments of a minor nature. Two amendments remedy a flaw in the schedule relating to the procedure for recovering income tax and interest on it in respect of dividends and interest paid by companies. They involve a new paragraph 12 to the schedule which reads:

'12. Where the amount of any tax payable in accordance with sub-paragraph (2) of paragraph 1 of the said Schedule 12 (adjustment at end of year) is agreed between the company and the Inspector –

- (a) the making of an assessment charging that tax, or an appeal against the assessment, shall not affect the date when the tax is due (that is to say, as provided by paragraph 5 (1) of the said Schedule 12, fourteen days after the tax is so agreed), and
- (b) the power of making an assessment under sub-paragraph (3) of the said paragraph 1 shall include power to make an assessment of the tax on that company if that tax, or any part of it, is not paid within the said fourteen days after the tax is so agreed (whether or not it has been paid when the assessment is made).'

The involved provisions in clause 20 about capital allowances were the subject of an elaborate explanation by the SOLICITOR-GENERAL. He said that since last autumn Parliamentary counsel and officers of the Inland Revenue had been working on the consolidation of the law relating to capital allowances for the purposes of the income tax and corporation tax. (It will be remembered that the resulting Bill was thrown out by Parliament as not being a purely consolidating measure.) In the course of their examination they discovered that two corrections fell to be made. These are covered by sub-clauses (1) and (3). They also discovered [sic] that, in certain respects, it was desirable to clarify the law.

On clause 20 (1) (allowances on dredging expenditure) the SOLICITOR-GENERAL went through the various provisions beginning with section 17 of the Finance Act 1956 and ending with the abolition of investment allowances by the Finance Act 1966. The intention was that the pre-existing initial allowance of three-twentieths should be automatically revived. Clause 20 (1) now achieves this. It hardly need be said how extraordinarily confusing all these changes in capital allowances over the years have been. Clause 20 (2) was intended to remove a doubt. It was desired to bring forward into corporation tax the old rule that obtained under the Income Tax Act 1952, under which capital allowance could be carried forward indefinitely against the relative item of income, or could be set off against the claimant's general income for two years. When corporation tax was imposed, it was intended to apply the same rule but doubts have arisen as to whether section 56 of the Finance Act 1965 achieved this. Hence clause 20 (2). The sub-clause is retrospective to the beginning of corporation tax.

The Finance Act 1966 which abolished investment allowances (to be replaced by investment grants) also repealed Schedule 2 to the Finance Act 1954 which incorporated provisions of the Income Tax Act 1952 as regards certain options where plant and machinery was sold in such circumstances as to incur a balancing charge. It was thought at the time of the repeal that this would restore the 1952 Act provisions but doubts have since arisen. Accordingly clause 20 (3) makes it clear. Clause 20 (4) seeks to clear up four other doubts which have arisen.

When clause 13 imposing income tax at 8s 3d was reached, a gallant Opposition attempt was made to reduce the rate to 7s 6d. It was pointed out that on present tax rates a £50,000 gross salary was worth only a little more than £10,000 net; whereas in the United States the employee would be left with over £25,000. The attempt was related to a move to reduce the top rate of surtax to 7s 6d thus making the maximum combined rate 15s in the £, and seeking to ensure that however much extra one earned, 5s of each £ could actually be spent and enjoyed. At present the top combined rate is 18s 3d, and for 1965-66 it is 19s 3d. This provoked a comment from the CHANCELLOR OF

THE EXCHEQUER that 'There is a myth that this country is overtaxed'. An Opposition speaker said that once one reached the £10,000 a year level the comparison with other countries was very striking. At that level the Englishman retained 26.25 per cent of his earnings; the American 41.6 per cent; the Frenchman 60.4 per cent; the West German 52.9 per cent; and the Japanese 36 per cent. These were the marginal rates. At £15,000 the proportions retained were 16.25 per cent for the Englishman, the others being 37.6 per cent, 53.2 per cent; 49.8 per cent and 30 per cent respectively.

To these arguments the Government replied that what mattered was not the marginal rate but the overall rate, which is, of course, true of employees on fixed salaries but not true where a man carries on a profession. The other Government argument was that one did not just work for money but for the prestige of a superior job. Why then, asked the Opposition, was it necessary to pay £25,000 a year to men to get them into a nationalized industry?

Coupled with this move to reduce the top marginal rates was a move to raise the minimum income for surtax purposes. It was pointed out that since Mr SELWYN LLOYD introduced earned income relief for surtax payers in 1961 and made the effective exemption limit £5,000, the value of money had dropped still further. Some interesting observations were made about the PRIME MINISTER's salary. Nominally £14,500 per annum, it carried a tax-free expenses allowance of £4,000, together with the right to reside in a town house and country house provided for him, official motor-cars, and entertainments. A Government member had computed that the position was worth some £200,000 a year gross. For the ordinary person the British tax system imposed an effective ceiling of £7,000 a year on net earnings.

Some caustic comments were made about the 10 per cent surcharge made on surtax for 1965-66 at the time of the crisis in July 1966. It was pointed out that, in the context of reduction in demand and consumption, this particular tax change could have very little influence since the tax was not payable until much later. This brought a comment from the Government back benches that there ought to have been a 'cracking good capital levy' instead of a mere 10 per cent increase in surtax.

There was general welcome for clause 14 which gives spreading relief to authors who sell a ten-year-old copyright. One member wished to know how one decided that an author had 'permanently discontinued' his profession as author. The answer is that this was a question of fact 'which he will have to establish with the Inspector of taxes'. The debate continued as we went to press.

Current Affairs

Institute's New Council Member

AS announced in the report of the proceedings of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales on other pages of this issue,

Mr L. H. Clark, F.C.A., a partner in the firm of Harmood-Banner, Cash, Stone & Mounsey, has been co-opted to the Council for a term of five years.

Articled in 1938 to Mr Donald V. House, F.C.A., a former President of the Institute, Mr Clark qualified in 1946 after having served throughout the Second World War with the Royal Artillery. It is an interesting sidelight that he sat his Final examination in a Nissen hut in Belgium!

At present Chairman of the Institute's Technical Advisory Committee (formerly the Taxation and Research Committee), of which committee he has been a member since 1957, Mr Clark was also chairman of the Taxation Subcommittee from 1963 to 1965. He became a partner in his present firm, then styled Harmood-Banner, Lewis & Mounsey, in 1949.

Resignations from the Council of the Institute

THE resignations of Mr T. A. Hamilton Baynes, M.A., F.C.A., and Mr J. H. Bell, B.A., F.C.A., from the Council of the Institute are also announced in the report of the proceedings of the Council.

Mr Hamilton Baynes, who is a partner in the firm of Chalmers, Impey & Co, Chartered Accountants, of Birmingham, has been a member of the Council since 1950. He was chairman of the Articled Clerks Committee from 1964 to date, of the Disciplinary Committee from 1965 to date, and of the Library Committee from 1957-60. He has also served on the Examination, Finance, Summer Course and Education Committees.

Mr Hamilton Baynes has taken an active part in the affairs of the Institute for many years and has attended numerous courses and conferences as a member of the Council. He presided over the Institute's pilot course on current tax practice and planning held last year at Brighton.

Mr Bell, senior partner in the firm of Parkinson, Mather & Co, Chartered Accountants, of Manchester, has been a member of the Council since 1956.

A member of the District Societies Committee from 1956 to 1963 and again from 1964 to date, he has also served on the Applications, Library (chairman 1963-66), Finance, Articled Clerks and Internal Services Committees.

Birthday Honours

IN the Birthday Honours List published last Saturday, Mr W. Rendell, M.A., F.C.A., general manager, Commonwealth Development Corporation and Mr R. J. Sainsbury, F.C.A., chairman, J. Sainsbury Ltd, both become Knights Bachelor.

Three members of the profession receive the C.B.E. They are: Mr O. Cochran, O.B.E., C.A., Assistant Secretary, Board of Trade; Mr F. E. Price, F.C.A., a member of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and a partner in Arthur Collins & Co, of Newport, Mon, and Mr C. I. Turcan, C.A., chairman and senior managing director, Andrew Yule & Co Ltd, Calcutta.

The O.B.E. has been awarded to Mr D. S. Carmichael, C.A., F.C.W.A., F.T.I.L., J.P., Vice-Chairman, National Savings Committee for Scotland, to Mr A. E. Welsh, F.C.A., City Treasurer, Georgetown, Malaysia, and to Mr F. W. Lindgren, F.C.A., Honorary Treasurer, R.A.F. Association.

Incomes Policy and Profitability

THE incomes policy has currently few friends and a recent contribution to our contemporary, Accountancy (June), by Professor A. J. Merritt and Mr John Whittaker entitled 'Profitability, investment and incomes policy' raises further doubts as to the efficacy of the Government's deflationary policy.

The theme of the article is that low levels of profits are discouraging manufacturing industry from increasing its rate of gross fixed capital formation.

According to the authors the percentage return on net worth in manufacturing industry, net of all taxes, has declined sharply since 1964. Then it was 8.3 per cent, while it was only 6.7 per cent in 1965 and 5.9 per cent last year. Investment expressed as a percentage of gross capital stock in manufacturing industry has declined rather less, but in recent years has been virtually static.

Even when allowance is made for defects of the figures, which the authors rightly recognize, the lessons appear to be self-evident. The major inducement to higher rates of capital formation in industry is the rate of profit which, in turn, is dependent upon consumption. To the extent that the current incomes policy, which involves both price restraint and a measure of deflation, is tending to depress profit it weakens the incentive for industry to build up the resources for the next phase of expansion. In the long run, therefore, state the authors, the severe phase of the incomes policy is inherently self-defeating.

Women in the Profession

THE proportion of women members of the accountancy profession is not high. There are probably not many more than a thousand qualified women accountants in Britain. But there are indications, however, that increasing numbers of girls are being attracted to the profession. Certainly, as Sir Henry Benson, C.B.E., F.C.A., said at the twenty-first annual dinner of the Women Chartered Accountants' Dining Society last December, there is a need for more women accountants and women have a number of attributes – such as an intuitive grasp of matters, an aptitude for coping with detail, and a desire to see fairness done – which make them particularly suitable for accountancy.

In any event, helping the young students has for long been one of the many activities of the Women Chartered Accountants' Dining Society, and this was exemplified on Thursday of last week when a gathering of about sixty girl students – both those studying to be chartered accountants as well as certified accountants – were addressed by women members of the profession, under the chairmanship of Mrs Mollie Burgess, F.C.A., Chairman of the Dining Society.

The formal talks took place in the conference room of the City of London College, where the students heard talks by Miss Vera Di Palma, A.A.C.C.A., Miss Muriel Fowler, A.C.A., Miss Margaret Fox, F.C.A., Mrs Pauline Graham, A.A.C.C.A., Miss Helen Hartley, M.A., F.C.A., Miss Angela Mason, A.C.A., Miss Elizabeth Thurston, A.C.A., A.A.C.C.A., and Mrs Margaret Wheatley, A.A.C.C.A. Afterwards the speakers and students assembled in the library of The Chartered Accountant Students' Society of London, where they were welcomed by Mr Christopher Burr, A.C.A., Chairman of the Committee of the Society and Miss Ann Dent, a member of the Committee.

Housing Commentary

PUBLIC discussion inside or outside Parliament on the subject of housing is characterized not so much by fact as by emotion. Television plays such as Cathy Come Home may bring out for the average citizen the problems of the homeless, but there is an absence of similarly effective attempts to demonstrate the result of the housing policies of successive Governments.

For those interested in an informed and readable summary of the facts relating to the housing scene, an Occasional Paper just published by the Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants entitled The Finance of Housing by Mr William Appleyard, F.I.M.T.A., F.C.A. (5s post free), merits attention. The author makes his case with relevant British and European statistics, coupled with a terse commentary which leaves the reader to draw, in the main, his own conclusions. He does, however, commit himself to the view that 'direct and indirect subsidies (all classes of householder) amount to more than £800 million per annum – a sum which, if more rationally controlled and directed, could greatly influence the supply and maintenance of a more balanced stock of housing'.

The author's views on the building industry are less than flattering. He doubts the capacity of the industry as at present organized and with its current building techniques, to match the target of 500,000 houses per annum which are needed in the next decade.

Inquiry into Professional Services

FOLLOWING the request by the President of the Board of Trade to the Monopolies Commission for a general report on restrictive practices affecting professional services, the Commission have now formally approached some one hundred and fifty bodies, representative of a wide range of professional and occupational groups, seeking information to assist them in their inquiry.

It appears that the Commission are keeping an open mind at present as to the implication of the words 'profession' and 'professional services'. They have therefore spread the net fairly widely, while emphasizing that an approach for information does not in itself imply recognition of professional status.

Unpaid Builder not the Owner

PRINTED 'Conditions of sale' used by a building contractor were the subject of proceedings in a liquidation on June 1st. The High Court dismissed a claim by the contractor against the liquidator of Yorkshire Joinery Co Ltd in respect of building materials supplied to that company which were used in the erection of a factory. At the time of supply the company had a receiver in and he subsequently sold the completed factory to Armstrong Patents Ltd. A few months later the company went into creditors' voluntary liquidation and the receiver became liquidator. There were not enough assets to pay all creditors, including the building contractor which remained unpaid for the building materials.

The contractor claimed to be paid in full, relying on condition 9 (e) of its conditions of sale which provided that the materials erected or otherwise on the site were to remain the property of the contractor until paid for. It was common ground that the factory was not movable but became annexed to the land so as to be part of the freehold.

Rejecting the claim, Plowman, J., said, according to The Times, of June 2nd, that the contract was a business contract and had to be construed sensibly. Condition 9 (e) operated only so long as the materials retained their identity; not when they had become annexed to the freehold.

View from the Bank

THE latest Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin (June) has little to add in its review of the economic situation to that already known. The Chancellor, it comments, 'has made it plain that he has no intention of being deflected from his present course of running the economy at a sustainable level of demand'. There are some signs of slow recovery in output which, helped by rising public sector expenditure, in particular Exchequer borrowing, should help maintain the expansion. But the overall growth rate is not likely to exceed 3 per cent by the end of the year.

The Bulletin contents itself with a reminder that the future of the incomes policy is a major problem. In contrast, the latest review of the economy from the London and Cambridge Economic Service questions whether the freeze has been in the long-term interests of the United Kingdom economy in view of the foregone output which the deflation has entailed.

For the historically inclined, the Bank of England Bulletin contains two articles of interest. The first sets out statistics of the assets and liabilities of the Bank since its foundation in 1696, while the other examines the development of the discount market since 1945 with a few comments on its earlier history. Students should find this article of particular value.

Regional Employment Premiums

AS indicated in last week's issue the Government has decided to implement the scheme for the payment of employment premiums in the development areas. Details of the scheme are given in a new White Paper, The Development Areas (Cmd 3310; H.M.S.O., 1s 9d). From September onwards there is to be a premium of 30s per week for every full-time male employee in any manufacturing establishment, 15s per female employee and boy, and 9s 6d in respect of each girl worker. Half-rate will be paid in respect of part-time labour working between eight and twenty-one hours in the week.

The only change in the original proposal made in the face of the widespread criticism of the D.E.A.'s

*"Which one? Which one?" thought Alice.
"Do I drink from the bottle or eat the cake? I know something will happen... and I should like to be a little larger.
I'm really quite tired of being the size
I am". She sighed.
"But supposing I do the wrong thing..."*

Doing the wrong thing is all too easy in the complex business world of today. Modern financial legislation complicates every decision and it is becoming progressively more dangerous to rely upon instinct. Neville are specialists in sorting out such economic problems and are able to offer advice on the best course to follow.

A Need of Gratitude

A legacy for the Methodist Homes for the Aged is a means many generous people adopt in expressing gratitude for their own home and for serenity and peace-of-mind in their old age.

There are so many who are less fortunate and for lonely and anxious old people the Methodist Homes for the Aged are a haven and a home. Our constantly growing income from legacies, more than any other factor, has enabled us to embark on the capital expenditure for twenty-five Homes. Unfortunately even these will accommodate only a few of the hundreds of deserving people on the tragically long waiting list.

scheme is that the minimum period of operating the scheme is to be extended from five to seven years. It seems that the Government believes there is no practicable alternative to stimulating activity in the development areas, and moreover that the scheme will be neither inflationary in its effects nor necessitate further taxation. The Government adheres to its belief that the stimulus given to economic activity in the regions will more than offset any cost.

The Government is, of course, entitled to its opinion. The taxpayer and the distributive and service trades may well wonder how much more the Government can extract from them in pursuit of regional economic balance. It may be in the 'national interest', appropriately defined, to seek such a goal but those paying the price are entitled to ask why it is that industry has not found these areas sufficiently attractive in the past. Likewise, were the different labour situations in the other areas of the country allowed to be reflected in appropriate wage differentials, it might not be necessary to subsidize local manufacturing industries in this fashion.

Redundancy in Ireland

THE impact of the Common Market on future employment and the likelihood of cheap importations winning local purchasing power, have long been regarded uneasily in Ireland. No doubt designed to cushion the possible shock, a Redundancy Payments Bill was introduced recently in the Dail.

The Bill provides for two schemes, one for redundancy payments and one for resettlement allowances, for redundant and other unemployed workers who may have to leave their home areas to secure employment. The redundancy payments scheme will apply to workers normally in employment insurable under the Social Welfare Acts, excepting (a) part-time workers, i.e. those working for less than twenty-five hours per week for the same employer, and (b) workers under eighteen or over sixty-five years of age. Redundancy will be assumed if the whole or the main reason for a worker's dismissal is the fact that his job has ceased, or is about to cease, to exist.

To qualify for redundancy payment, a dismissed

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

WHEN I entered the managing director's room I was conscious of that momentary reaction described nowadays as butterflies in the stomach. This sensation will be familiar to all accountants summoned by a peremptory telephone call from their chief, despite their indignant asseverations that their consciences are clear. Clear they may be on the law of averages, but you never know.

I mentally recapped some potential danger spots. There was the refusal (possibly too blunt?) to grant special discount to Lady M who might well have passed her ultimatum to the senior level; then there had been that argument with the ready-mades buyer about his stock valuation; or might it be that fracas with the Hairpin, whose comment about the real reason for pretty Miss Smith's promotion had raised merry hell in the typing pool; or . . . anyhow, wait and see.

The managing director, however, was lounging back in leisurely style, so far unbending as to instruct his private secretary to bring another cup of coffee for me. It's possibly a symptom of battle-scarred years of hierarchial subtleties—something on the Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes principle—that I saw his gesture as suspicious. Softening up the defences was my mental analysis.

Still, he chatted amicably about rotational training in the accounts department and only the keenest ear would have detected a crisping of his tone as he asked about the punched-card supervisor. On top of his job? Always up to date with the analyses? Very capable? Fine, fine, delighted to hear it. Good working relationship with his colleagues, naturally?

That was it. The gunbarrel in the leaves; the wake of bubbles beneath the grey-green swell. The answer obviously called for swift evasive action . . . bland reassurance . . . couldn't be better, always harmonious, co-operative, universally popular, etc.

He'd heard some rumour of argument, mused the managing director, of some refusal to give information when requested, perhaps; some questioning of why it was wanted, and so on. Probably quite inaccurate, of course, but then it was Accounts' function to give information promptly, not to question the interrogator. 'Their's is not to reason why', and all that.

I agreed, of course, but it wasn't quite that simple. Too many people nowadays wanted to interrupt long tabulator runs with their clamour for instant reports about trivialities. Usually they could wait till after lunch, but some of the salesmen, for instance, tended to be overbearing to say the least. One arrogant character had recently come clamouring for prompt November/April statistics from us, although he already had the individual month's figures available, but he just couldn't be bothered to summarize the figures himself.

He rather deprecated suggestions of emotional relationships, interposed the managing director. People should learn to ignore personality clashes and get on with the job. Co-operation was vital. I expressed enthusiastic agreement. For the sake of amity we tried to overlook these brash salesmen throwing their weight about, unappreciative of accountants' status as team-mates, rather than as meek subordinates. Naturally, service to our colleagues, in the interests of the well-being of the company, was our overriding priority.

The managing director nodded cordially. Nobody listening to our impeccable generalizations would have guessed that on emerging I would have some blunt home truths to say to the punched-card supervisor, while the sales manager would just as certainly be cutting down to size his own erring subordinate.

worker must have had at least four years' service reckonable as continuous service with the employer by whom he was employed immediately prior to becoming redundant. If so qualified, the redundant worker will be entitled to receive a lump sum from his employers, and in addition, contingent on his unemployment, weekly payments from a fund to be established. The lump sum will be calculated on the basis of half a week's pay for each year of employment between the ages of eighteen and forty-one years, and one week's pay for each year of employment over the age of forty-one years. The maximum lump sum will be the equivalent of sixteen weeks' pay.

The amount of the weekly payments which the qualified redundant worker will be entitled to receive will be the equivalent of 50 per cent of his normal weekly pay. This will be in addition to any disability, unemployment, or other benefit payable under the Social Welfare Acts, or unemployment assistance payable under the Unemployment Assistance Acts. The total of all such payments must not exceed 90 per cent of the worker's normal pre-redundancy pay.

Employers who make lump-sum payments will be eligible to receive rebates under the Bill. These will be equivalent to half of the lump sums paid, with a bonus (subject to a maximum of 65 per cent), graduated to the number of extra weeks' notice given over a minimum fortnight.

The Redundancy Fund will be financed by weekly contributions from employers (8d for males and 6d for females), and from workers (4d by males and 3d by females), probably by means of a special stamp.

What is Return on Capital Employed?

by JULIUS SHERIDAN, F.C.A.

THERE is a clear necessity for the phrase 'return on capital employed' to be defined in accountancy terms, because at the present time it appears to mean all things to all men. Consideration should also be given to whether it should continue to be used without qualification. This phrase is concerned with the capital employed, the return on that capital and the relationship of one with the other.

First, it is necessary to distinguish between economic and accountancy terms because, whether desirable or not, differences exist. Classical economists explain that there are four elements in economic theory: capital, land, labour and enterprise. The return for capital is interest; for land it is rent; for labour, wages; and for enterprise the return is profit. The accountancy conception relating to the technical and practical matter of capital and the return involved in a commercial undertaking is somewhat different. In accountancy terms, capital can and often does embrace (economic) capital and land and the return with which we are concerned can, and often does, include profit, interest and rent.

Varying definitions

In The Accountant of April 22nd, 1967, profitability was defined as 'the relationship between profits and the capital employed in the business'.<sup>1</sup> Various relatively new concepts of measuring efficiency are being introduced into modern accountancy and are being used more extensively in industrial, commercial and financial circles; many of the ratios and comparisons are related to the capital employed. The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales have issued some short notes in the Members' Handbook headed 'Statistics relating to income of and capital employed by companies' (S 2). The Institute refers to this matter as 'statistics' and includes it under the section 'Miscellaneous Technical Statements'. The previous section in the Institute's Handbook is 'Management Accounting' and included under 'Business Efficiency' (R 3) is a more detailed study of the 'Return on capital employed', together with an attempt at definition. Both these sections are quite useful and helpful but the same terminology is used in both cases, although there are distinctive meanings.

In section R 3, reference is really to assets employed, whilst in section S 2, reference is mainly to the shareholders' interest, together with other long-term loans and liabilities.

The Institute's Handbook suggests the following definitions of capital employed:

- (a) Add the stocks and the debtors to the fixed assets at cost without making any deduction for amounts due to trade or other creditors or for depreciation or obsolescence. (Profits would be computed after charging depreciation or obsolescence.)
- (b) As (a) but deduct depreciation.
- (c) As (a) or (b) but deduct creditors.
- (d) As (a), (b) or (c) but value fixed assets at current replacement value, calculating depreciation on the basis of the new values.

- (e) As (c) or (d) but excluding cash balances or overdrafts. (N.B. This in itself is slightly confusing as (a) excludes cash balances on strict reading).
- (f) Total capital employed being the share capital and reserves, including minority interests, plus debentures and other long-term liabilities.
- (g) Equity capital and reserves being the share capital and reserves including minority interests less all preferential capital.
- (h) Share capital and reserves being the amounts relating to all shareholders.
- (i) As (h) but relating only to the shareholders of the holding company, minority interests being treated as a liability.

The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants in its booklet Terminology of Cost Accountancy give the following definitions of capital employed:

- (a) Total capital employed being the sum of issued share capital, reserves and loans (as (f) above).
- (b) Total shareholders' capital employed being the sum of issued share capital and reserves (similar to (h) above).
- (c) Total equity capital employed being the sum of issued ordinary share capital and reserves (similar to (g) above).

If, as is apparent, the use of the profit/capital employed ratio is being more and more widely adopted, then it is important that our terminology be regularized. Different forms of capital should have different designations and when a ratio is quoted it should be easily and clearly identified.

Investors' viewpoint

In the article in The Accountant previously mentioned, capital employed was defined as 'the total long-term funds employed in the business or the total net assets of the business, the two figures being the same' (which is perhaps the same as (f) above), but many shareholders would argue that net assets should be arrived at after all external liabilities. Also, shareholders may well only be concerned with the return on their capital invested, with or without the addition of reserves.

In many cases, if not all, it is essential to retain reserves in a business; in other words, not all the return on capital can be withdrawn. The investor wants a return on capital, whilst keeping his capital intact. He often hopes for appreciation and certainly, where inevitable depreciation is obvious, he requires a larger return to compensate. In this respect, the effects of inflation are particularly important and it has been postulated that all assets (current as well as fixed) should be adjusted to take account of this factor. The prudent investor should always examine the risks to his own capital by referring to the return on the total capital employed in the business. A shift in the proportionate contribution or make-up of capital invested might drastically affect the return on any one class of risk capital.

The investor has one (often more than one) viewpoint; the manager has another. He is managing a business, none of the capital is his own. How much capital is employed? Only that of the proprietor? This would imply only the use of net assets, but surely he is employing the gross assets and should these not be termed capital employed? Is it reasonable to ask, if one were to commence a particular business today, at its present stage of development, how much capital would one have to invest if there were no other sources such as creditors? Should such a valuation take into account goodwill?

Let us examine a few examples:

- (a) Proprietor A owns a business, net assets: (assets £300,000 – creditors £200,000) £100,000 = capital and reserves = capital employed? His net profit (however defined) is £15,000 per annum; return 15 per cent?
- (b) He sells the business to Proprietor B for £150,000 = B's investment = capital employed? Profits remain unchanged; return 10 per cent?
- (c) Business now sold to Proprietor C for £175,000, but arrangements are made for extra credit with bankers and suppliers and C is able to withdraw £100,000, leaving £75,000 of his capital in the business; return 20 per cent?
- (d) The gross assets have remained unchanged at £300,000; return 5 per cent?

The investor is managing his money and must judge his efficiency by the return on that money, relating it to its security. The manager is managing the gross assets and must be judged on his utilization of those assets. Where he is also responsible for arranging finance, then his efficiency in that respect may be better measured by his return on net assets. If, however, a loss is made in any year, reducing the net assets, it is possible to appear more efficient in a following year on the same profits as a previous year, yet the return on gross assets could have deteriorated.

Effect of distribution

Distributions can also have a similar effect. Even if discounted cash flow (D.C.F.) methods are utilized the different investors could still get different rates of return, while the manager could be maintaining his position. It is important to remember that the return on capital is over a period and therefore the average capital employed over a given period must be taken. When comparisons are being made, consistency in the method of averaging can be important, especially in businesses with seasonally fluctuating assets and profitability. It is often found that a higher asset position arises at a period of low activity and profit.

Consider a fictitious public company with one major operating subsidiary. The balance sheets (monthly average basis) are as shown in Fig. 1 below. What is the capital employed and the rate of return?

Various interested parties will arrive at different answers. Different ratios to meet specific circumstances may well be justified, but these ratios need to be properly designated so that they are easily recognized; indeed the use of more than one ratio may be essential.

It is often found that goodwill is only taken into account when it has actually been paid for. Later if it is written off it will be excluded. In a group, some investments may include goodwill, others not. Profitability affects goodwill and this item is likely to fluctuate and so distort the returns if included. However, if it has been paid for it can hardly be excluded. Arguments range each way, but in any event when the ratio is quoted it should clearly indicate what element (if any) of goodwill has been included.

Investors in the Stock Exchange refer to their return (dividend yield) on investment based upon the current market assessment of the value of their shares, thereby taking into account goodwill. They should also, of course, relate the return to the actual cost. The profits/earnings (P/E) ratio quoted in, say, The Financial Times also indicates the return on capital employed taking into account goodwill and inflation by giving a current market valuation to the whole share capital and comparing it with the profits.

Reasons for ascertaining return on capital

The main reasons for wanting to know the return on capital are:

- (a) to determine the efficiency of the original investment;
- (b) to determine whether further investment is warranted;
- (c) to compare one investment with another;
- (d) to assess the efficiency of management.

At the moment, the ratios published by one company may be on an entirely different basis from those of another, yet exactly the same terminology might be used in both cases. This is an absolutely untenable position.

The manner in which the return on capital employed is computed can also distort the issue. Changes in methods and allocation of depreciation, taxation and Government grants can suddenly give the appearance of great improvement or deterioration of efficiency.

Investors and managers must be judged on the efficiency of the operations within their control. Alterations in Government policy can distort this judgement, however, it is equally important to see to what extent the advantages of any Government legislation are being utilized. Profits must clearly show the position before and after depreciation and taxation and whether based on historic or current values. Where fixed interest on, say, loan capital is material or where certain assets are fixed-income bearing (e.g., properties let at fixed rents) and these factors have a material effect upon the general returns on capital, then due allowance should be made in order to arrive at the proper ratios.

Suggested designations

The preceding comments show clearly that confusion exists at the present time and it is not possible to evaluate easily the real meaning of a particular quoted ratio. These ratios are of considerable importance, but their value is reduced by their lack of designation.

It is suggested that the following designations be adopted based upon the accompanying definitions. It is further suggested that the term 'capital employed' should not be used by itself in unqualified form. Having been abused and misused the term is now too loose and too general. Both the interested professional and the layman deserve a more specific description. Where ratios are published with annual or other accounts, there should be easy reference to the source of the figures being utilized.

Designation	Definition
1. Total capital employed:	being the share capital and reserves including minority interests, plus debentures and other long-term liabilities.
2. Equity capital employed:	being the share capital and reserves, including minority interests less all preferential capital.
3. Share capital employed:	being the amounts relating to all shareholders, including reserves.
4. Net share capital employed:	being as (3), but relating only to the shareholders of the holding company, minority interests being treated as a liability.
5. Total assets employed:	being the addition of current assets to the fixed assets at cost without making any deduction for amounts due to trade or other creditors or for depreciation or obsolescence.
6. Gross assets employed:	being as (5), but deduct depreciation (calculated appropriately when current replacement value is used).
7. Net assets employed:	being as (6), but deduct creditors and stating whether cash balances or overdraft excluded.
8. Cost of investment	being cost of acquisition.
9. Market value of investment	being market valuation or equivalent.
10. (a) Profits before depreciation and taxation.
(b) Profits after depreciation before taxation.
(c) Profits after depreciation after taxation.
(d) Dividend on ordinary share capital.

Conclusion

When the designations are used it should be stated as to whether they are valued at historic cost (H.C.), or current replacement value (C.R.V.). It should also be appropriately stated whether Government or other grants are involved, whether goodwill is excluded or included and to what extent, and the basis of averaging (if any).

It is not being argued here as to which of the ratios is most useful. Clearly they will vary for different purposes. What is essential is that ratios used are clearly defined so that interested parties can more clearly and easily determine their value. When speaking of the various types of capital or assets employed let us all be clear as to what is involved. This is only possible by utilizing standardized designations as now proposed.

Trends in the Field of International Taxation

by Professor LEIF MUTÉN of the University of Uppsala, Sweden

STRANGE as it may seem, nations seem to have much more in common in the field of taxation than one would believe, considering that national sovereignty is more jealously upheld in tax matters than in most others.

The tendency towards conformity arises partly from the international features of fiscal activity. International business requires international tax rules. Double tax treaties as well as unilateral measures against double taxation are indispensable means in this respect. Measures against abuses of tax havens and international tax evasion are also part of the same picture.

The international character of certain trends in tax law is also a consequence of similar problems requiring similar solutions in different countries. Sometimes countries learn from each other's experiences, and sometimes without even caring about what other States are doing, they discover similar means of tackling similar fiscal tasks. There are a number of fields where we may find that countries with quite different starting-points (for instance, concerning the basic concept of taxable income) have shown a certain convergent tendency. For example, countries with quite a broad concept of income have found ways and means of treating capital gains in a more liberal manner than they treat ordinary income, whereas source-income countries like the U.K. have not only gradually broadened the concept of business profit, but have introduced capital gains taxes of general application.

Company-shareholder taxation

One of the fields in which there is still quite a confused situation is the co-ordination of company income tax and income tax (including surtax) on shareholders. Whereas the general trend in the E.E.C. has gone towards a better integration of company tax and shareholders' income tax, the reverse trend in the U.K. has certainly been surprising to a world used to the British respect for old traditions. It is ironical that France has, in fact, taken over the old British system practically at the same moment as the British went over to the system France has just left.

It is no use my trying to guess why the British did this. There are, however, a few general implications worth mentioning in this context. One is the general agnosticism concerning the incidence of the corporation income tax. Some of those who studied this problem have certainly succeeded in breaking the hegemony of the neo-classical theory of incidence according to which no shifting could take place in regard to a tax on net profits. But there is, on the other hand, a feeling that those who promote the theory of something like a 100 per cent shifting have succeeded rather too well in proving their postulates. As a matter of fact, their statistical proof is too good to be true. There is a considerable danger in making legislators believe that since net profits after taxes were kept pretty well the same during the general rise of taxes from pre-war times to the 'sixties, the corporation profits tax can be regarded as another kind of indirect tax. As an indirect tax, a tax on companies as such will never be a very just one, nor is there reason to believe that the degree of shifting will be the same in the present period of narrow profit margins as it used to be in the wartime and post-war boom periods.

In discussing the integration of company income tax and income tax on shareholders, two principal solutions are possible: one differentiating the company tax in favour of distributed profits; the other offering relief to shareholders. In fact, a third attitude has been discussed – the partnership approach. Though it can be adapted to smaller companies, this method must be regarded as impractical for the big public companies.

Of the other two methods, the differentiated company income tax, the split rate, will normally mean an equal relief to all groups of shareholders. The significance of this relief for the companies will differ, however, according to the status of their shareholders. In fact, the differences might even be so large as to make certain precautions necessary in order not to give undeserved privileges to companies whose shareholders are in a position to enjoy their dividends free of income tax. If the tax rate is lower for distributed profits than for retained profits, a company with shareholders in the privileged group may virtually retain its profits by requesting shareholders to subscribe for new shares out of the moneys paid out as dividends.

This is the reason why Germany taxes inter-corporate dividends in the hands of the company to which they are distributed, at a rate co-ordinated with the corporation tax differential. The same idea lies behind Germany's endeavour to raise the maximum withholding tax rate in its tax treaties in those cases, where the shareholding company enjoys the privileges connected with what is here called franked dividend income. To be sure, the re-negotiation of its tax treaties for this purpose has not been an entire success and certainly it has not been done without tears.

A split corporate tax rate leads us to another problem concerned with the fact that in many countries a growing part of shareholdings is in the hands of charitable trusts. These normally enjoy the privileges of freedom from income tax on their dividends. Charitable exemptions cannot be criticized provided charitable trusts are really charitable, and provided that the competitive position of companies controlled by charities is not influenced by the charity exemption. But neither of these postulates seems to be true. The creation of charitable trusts is often a method to keep family control over a close company otherwise endangered by death taxes. A split corporate tax rate gives ample chances of growth for these companies, the dividends of which go to charitable trusts ready to reinvest them. We must be prepared for the split company tax rate to discriminate against charities in the future.

Even more important than preventing abuses of the split rate via tax-exempt shareholders is the problem of those shareholders whose progressive income tax rate is in the higher brackets. One of the reasons for a split rate lies in the argument that self-financing should be made more difficult. This philosophy is sometimes expressed by saying that corporate profits before they are reinvested should be exposed to 'the test of the market'. If, however, the market route goes through high-bracket shareholders, we must face a risk that, even though the investment plans of a company are good, the tax cost of exposing its distributed profits to the test of the market might be so high as to leave only a small part of them available for reinvestment. We are ignorant of how shareholders dispose of their dividends. We may suspect that they have to use a considerable part of it for paying taxes. We might in these circumstances find justification for a solution to the problem which leaves more in the company through improving the position of retained profits, rather than continue to penalize them.

The former British system was not of that sort. The integration of company income tax and individual income tax went far enough to make up for any positive difference between the profits tax on distributed profits and the profits tax on profits retained. The former British system – like the present French one – must be regarded as an exponent of the integration of the taxes paid by the company and the shareholders. From an international point of view, the French system has been criticized for giving a relief to domestic shareholders which is not available to investors from abroad. The Canadian Royal Commission will presumably reap a rich harvest of international criticism on the same lines, for making a credit available to all Canadian shareholders for income tax already paid by Canadian companies, but excluding foreign shareholders from the same right.

On the other hand, like the split rate, the French system of avoir fiscal is definitely justified in grossing up the company's distributed profits when calculating the shareholder's tax position. The rough methods used in the U.S.A., and hitherto in Canada, whether by deducting part of it from the shareholder's income or giving him a credit of a given percentage of dividends received, seem to miss the point that tax progression requires a grossing up of the dividends before the tax relief can be calculated in a convincing manner. But – as is shown in the Canadian report – the tax exempt position of shareholding charities is a problem in such a system, too.

The granting of relief to shareholders rather than companies normally means that its value does not depend quite as much on the year in which a dividend is distributed. One reason for this is that there is no chance of tax relief being lost for ever through the retaining of profits one year in favour of a bigger dividend in a later year. The split rate, as it is typically constructed, is a strong incentive to immediate distribution, although one finds that a favourable relationship between the tax treatment of retained company profits and the tax on shareholders' top bracket income is in fact an argument for the accumulation of company profits even though the differential between the company tax rates may be substantial.

Self-financing and economic growth

Once again we come to the problem of what Governments wish companies to do with their profits. During the war the general tendency seems to have been restrictive. Shareholders should not enjoy rising dividends in times when the wage level was held down through governmental pressure. In these days, however, many of those who were once the strongest opponents of dividends seem to have changed their minds and favour higher distributions – provided the company profits are exposed not only to the test of the market but to the double taxation of distributed profits as well.

The British system expresses this tendency in the rules on close companies and surtax avoidance. But a legislator opposed to close companies being used as tax-free or tax-cheap savings-boxes will certainly find, sooner or later, that public companies serving the same purpose are not much better in this respect.

Nevertheless, there is a strange ambivalence not only in the British tax legislation of 1965 but also in that of many other countries as well. Your legislators condemn the tax-cheap accumulation in close companies, and might even feel a little bit uneasy about the profitability test applied to profits ploughed back in a company, the shareholders of which find it too expensive to distribute them. But at the same time they have deemed it desirable to stimulate corporate investment by way of a comparatively low tax on retained profits.

This aim might be fulfilled in two different ways: low tax rates combined with normal accounting rules, or liberal accounting rules combined with high tax rates. We should remember here that international comparisons of relative tax burdens make very little sense, as long as you just compare the rates. The tax accounting rules must be taken into account as well.

If by one means or another the legislator wants to promote the growth of companies, the next problem is to make this policy compatible with a tax system aiming at a fair distribution of income and wealth. The basic connection between a capital gains tax and a lenient treatment of accumulated company profits is obvious. Nevertheless, the capital gains tax, at least if it is restricted to realized gains, is a very crude means of attacking the accumulation of wealth in companies.

Fair distribution of the tax burden

This brings us into another field of general tax interest: the fair distribution of the tax burden. Those who might have set their hopes on social justice being achieved by means of progressive taxation have often been left disappointed. Very little has been achieved so far as the distributive effect of income taxation is concerned.

This is not a complete argument for dropping tax progression. At least, we need direct tax progression to make up for the regressive distribution effects resulting from indirect taxes. If we choose instead to compensate for these by means of subsidies or negative taxes, to use a fashionable word, we don't avoid progression. Its effects are there, not only in connection with positive taxes at progressive rates, but also with negative taxes – subsidies – disappearing with rising incomes.

A very real problem which arises when progressive tax is of importance, is its effects on wages and salaries. Coming from Sweden, I have a story to tell about this. The trade union for people with academic training of which I am, of course, a member, entered last year's bargaining with a requirement that the spendable income, i.e. real income net of taxes, of its members should show at least some upward movement from the position at the start of the old contract period since the real consumption standard of the population in general had been rising during the time in question. In order to achieve this, a wage rise at a percentage slightly more than the cost-of-living index was not sufficient. Progressive taxation meant that a much higher percentage rise of gross wages was already needed in order to ensure an unchanged real spendable income.

This argument was misunderstood as an argument against the tax rates as such which are evidently not a matter of collective bargaining – not even with the State. But as a statement of the climate in which the wage structure is developing, it gives a hint on the facts behind progression. Are we perhaps imposing progressive taxes on skilled labour only to find that we are in effect taxing the employers of skilled people for the 'luxury' of hiring them? Given an international labour market for this kind of people, there is a definite risk for a country in which their spendable income is too low, to lose them to a country where the salaries are higher or the taxes lower so that the net income is higher. Given a broad enough sector of these glamour jobs with international opportunities, the whole salary structure will tend to fall into line, ending up in a real shifting of the progressive taxes in the salaries paid by public or private employers.

Hitherto, nobody has found out if this development is reversible. In other words, whether the unions would in fact accept lower salaries once the tax rates were made less progressive. They have, in fact, committed themselves to such a policy. But surely it would mean a risky experiment to test it. And what about those taxpayers, the incomes of whom are not fixed through collective bargaining – those, whose high incomes are the real object of income tax progression?

The progressive character of direct taxation has turned out to be a source of general concern among tax legislators. Numerous problems like those of taxpayers' compliance, the taxation of husbands and wives, the treatment of bunched income, the allocation of income and all kinds of avoidance schemes are likely to be easier to solve without progressive taxation.

Nevertheless, the steady growth of indirect taxation makes us believe that a fair amount of direct tax progression is unavoidable. Indirect taxation looks like a must for modern tax legislators. The fiscal burden normally is too big to be carried on one shoulder alone – the direct taxation needs its complement on the indirect side.

Indirect taxation

Sometimes the need for a stronger indirect element in taxation is motivated by reasons of foreign trade. Given the G.A.T.T. rules – and they seem to be the least harmful rules we can evolve – many nations see a means of promoting exports in sticking to taxes of a kind which follow the principle of destination instead of that of origin. The existence of tax borders makes a kind of dumping possible through using these methods. It is not achieved without sacrifice. What suffers most by extreme use of indirect taxes seems to me to be the feeling of individual justice in taxation.

In the search for more efficient indirect taxes, the value added tax (T.V.A.) has played a main role. It is only fair to admit that the T.V.A. – though adopted in the E.E.C. as the model indirect tax for that area – is not the only kind of tax which will provide an acceptable use of the G.A.T.T. rules. A single stage retail sales tax in a form which excludes the taxing of machinery and commodities for the production of taxed or exported goods, could do as well. The reasons for preferring a T.V.A. to a general single-stage sales tax are, however, important. The T.V.A. gives better chances of control and in countries where the former tax is of the cascade type, it means a less drastic readjustment of the liquidity burden of the tax and a less obvious way of relieving the buyers of formerly taxable commodities and machinery than does the pure single-stage retail sales tax.

This kind of tax dumping is not the only way in which tax policy gets intermingled with currency policy. Another is the fight against the use or abuse of tax havens. There is a connection between tax law and currency law on this point. For a country like the United States, in which currency restrictions cannot officially go further than a certain pressure voluntarily to observe certain non-binding restrictions, it is natural that tax laws will play an important part in fighting those taxpayers who find a foreign tax climate more agreeable than the domestic one. It is also obvious that the U.S. can afford a more extensive activity of its tax administration overseas than could any smaller country. Here we are reminded of the old truth that quod licet Jovi, non licet bovi.

For a country which cannot boast a free reserve currency, and which could neither afford an overseas tax administration nor give it an adequate authority to be of any use, the line of action might lie more in the field of currency restrictions. What kind of restrictions – tax or currency – are the worse seems to depend not only on the kind of administration entrusted with their application but also on the kind of taxpayer. In my country, I should guess that big business would prefer currency restrictions from which they could always get adequate exemptions through their contacts with the central bank and the Government, whereas small business would seem to feel better served by tax laws which are presumably more uniformly applied.

In fighting tax havens, some States are already using weapons of a doubtful nature, to say the least. If we regard the functions of the State as akin to that of an insurance business, the problem is that of some of the better risks leaving the group during a period in which they could afford the premiums and would get no payments back, the bad risks staying all the time and the emigrating good risks coming back if the foreign experience turns out badly. In Britain, your section 468 is, inter alia, a weapon against the emigration of companies. We must be careful about the temptation to erect similar borders around individuals. The mobility of people, the right to leave one's country, is a fundamental human right. However ready we may be to defend that right, we might nevertheless feel likely to accept in principle measures aiming at the efficient taxation of foreign earnings attributable to resident taxpayers or companies.

Still we cannot get around the fundamental difficulty here which lies in the different standards of equity. An equitable taxation of taxpayers in their own country might mean an inequitable treatment if their foreign competitors have to pay. Here, as so often in tax law, we find that giving equal things equal treatment sets the basically political problem of choosing criteria of equality. And here, we shall have to wait quite a long time for a general consensus. The question is wide open.

Betterment Levy – XIV

by K. BUCKLEY EDWARDS

SECTION 1 (4) provides that the functions of the Commission and of their officers and servants are to be performed on behalf of the Crown. Section 13 (1) provides that notwithstanding section 1 (4) building by-laws, building regulations and building standards regulations are to have effect in relation to the Commission and to land held or occupied by the Commission as if the functions of the Commission were not performed on behalf of the Crown.

Parts III, IV and VIII of the Town and Country Planning Act 1962 are applied to land in which there is an interest belonging to the Commission as if it were an interest held otherwise than by or on behalf of the Crown; and section 199 (2) (a) and (b) of the 1962 Act, which restricts the operation of certain sections of the 1962 Act in relation to Crown land is not to apply to land in which the Commission has an interest unless the land is Crown land apart from that interest.

If land is not Crown land apart from the interest of the Commission, land belonging to the Commission is subject to orders requiring discontinuance of use or alteration or removal of buildings or works under section 28 of the 1962 Act, tree preservation orders under section 29, building preservation orders under sections 30 and 31, orders for the proper maintenance of waste land under section 36 and the enforcement of planning control under section 45. Section 199 (3) of the 1962 Act applies as if any development carried out by or on behalf of the Commission were not development carried out by or on behalf of the Crown, so as to be subject to the enforcement of planning control by means of enforcement orders.

Easements and other rights

Section 81 of the 1962 Act enables a local authority or person deriving title under them to erect, construct, carry out or maintain any building or work on land which has been acquired or appropriated for planning purposes, notwithstanding that such operations involve interference with easements or similar rights attaching to land or any restrictions on the user of land arising out of a contract, such as a covenant not to build, so long as the operations conform with planning permission. Sections 164 and 165 of the 1962 Act provide that any rights of way or rights as to apparatus in respect of land acquired or appropriated which belong to statutory undertakers, may be extinguished after notice served by the purchasing or appropriating authority on the statutory undertaker. Alternatively, the statutory undertakers can be required to remove apparatus, and the purchasing or appropriating authority may remove and dispose of any apparatus in the event of the statutory undertakers failing to do so after service of notice, provided that no counter-notice has been served.

Section 14 (of the 1967 Act) applies these provisions to land which has been acquired by the Commission, whether by agreement or compulsorily, as they apply to land which has been acquired by a local authority under section 68 of the Act; but section 81 of the 1962 Act is not to apply to the doing of any act by a person deriving title under the Commission, other than a Minister, local authority, statutory undertaker or the National Coal Board, unless the act was done with the written approval of the Commission. The Commission may serve a notice under section 164 (1) of the 1962 Act notwithstanding that they have disposed of the land to which the notice relates, and where the powers of removal and disposal of apparatus become exercisable after the Commission have disposed of the land, they may be exercised by the person entitled to occupy the land as well as by the Commission.

In construing the Compulsory Purchase Act 1965, as applied by section 7 (1) (compulsory purchase orders) or section 10 (1) (effect of general vesting declaration) of the 1967 Act, (a) references to any erection, construction or carrying out of buildings or works authorized by section 81 of the 1962 Act as applied by section 14, and (b) in relation to the erection, construction or carrying out of any buildings or works so authorized, references in section 10 of the 1965 Act to the acquiring authority are to be construed as references to the person by whom the buildings or works are erected, constructed or carried out. Section 10 of the 1965 Act provides for compensation for injurious affection for which the acquiring authority has not made satisfaction under other provisions of the Act. Section 15 contains similar provisions relating to Scotland.

Commission's powers of disposal

By section 16 (1) the Commission are empowered, subject to any directions given them by the Minister under section 1, to make such 'dispositions' of land held by them, or of interests in or rights over land, as appear to them to be expedient in the public interest. A 'disposition' is defined by section 99 (1) as including the grant of a tenancy, the renewal, extension or other variation of a tenancy, and any other conveyance, assignment, transfer, grant, variation or extinguishment of an interest in or right over land, whether made by an instrument or otherwise. But unless otherwise required or authorized by the Minister, or in the case of a concessionary crownhold disposition under section 18, the Commission may not sell, lease or otherwise dispose of any land, or any interest in or right over land, except for the best consideration in money or money's worth which can reasonably be obtained. However, nothing in section 16 is to be construed:

- (a) as restricting the discretion of the Commission as to the parcels in which any land is to be disposed of, or as to the apportionment of the consideration for any disposition, or any part of that consideration, between different parts of the land disposed of; or
- (b) as preventing the Commission from disposing of part of an area of land at a consideration less than (the best consideration) with a view to disposing of the whole or any part of the remainder of that area for a consideration greater than that which might otherwise have been obtainable; or
- (c) as restricting the discretion of the Commission to reserve any right or privilege over or in relation to any land disposed of, or to dispose of land subject to any covenants, conditions or restrictions.

'Area of land' in paragraph (b) above is not defined, so that there would appear to be no obligation on the Commission, under paragraph (b), to secure that the total price paid for the whole area is the best price that can reasonably be obtained.

In determining for the purposes of section 16 whether the consideration to be given by a person for any disposition is the best that can reasonably be obtained, the Commission may take into account as part of that consideration any benefit conferred on them by improvements which have been or are proposed to be carried out, whether by that person or any other person, and whether on the land to which the disposition relates or any other land, and which have been or are to be carried out without cost to the Commission.

The Commission may dispose of land for any purpose notwithstanding that it was originally acquired by them for some other purpose, except that where the land was compulsorily acquired by the Commission before the second appointed day for the purposes of a person or body of persons, such as a local authority, under section 6 (4) (c), they may not dispose of the land for other purposes without the consent of the Minister who authorized them to make the compulsory purchase order or whose authority to make the compulsory purchase order would have been required if an objection to the order had been made and had not been withdrawn.

Crownhold

Section 17 creates the concept of a 'crownhold disposition' in order that land may be made available for development while retaining for the benefit of the Crown any element of value which may be attributable to the prospect of development or redevelopment of the land for some other purpose. A crownhold disposition may be by way of the sale of the freehold or the grant of a tenancy, but in either case the disposition must state that the interest is to be held by way of crownhold and must contain such covenants, known as 'crownhold covenants', restricting the carrying out of development or the clearing of land as, in the opinion of the Commission, are necessary for retaining the element of value referred to above. An interest in land held subject to a crownhold covenant is referred to as a 'crownhold interest'. In view of section 16 the Commission will be required to obtain the best consideration possible for a crownhold disposition, bearing in mind that the use of the land is restricted to the purpose for which the disposition is made.

Section 18 carries the concept of a crownhold disposition further. Where land is disposed of by way of such a disposition and is to be used for the provision of housing accommodation to be occupied (a) by the purchaser or tenant, or (b) by persons for whom such accommodation is to be provided by the purchaser or tenant in accordance with arrangements approved by the Commission, the disposition may be made for a consideration which is less than the best price which could reasonably be obtained. Such a disposition is referred to as a 'concessionary crownhold disposition' and must specify a sum as being the amount by which the best consideration obtainable is reduced. Where the disposition consists of the grant of a tenancy and a reduced rent is reserved by the disposition, account is to be taken in calculating that sum of the difference between the capital value of the right during the tenancy to receive that rent and the capital value of a right during the tenancy to receive the best rent obtainable.

The disposition must also contain the following covenants on the part of the purchaser or tenant, which must be expressed to be made by him as crownholder, namely:

- (a) a covenant that no tenancy of the land comprised in the concessionary disposition (referred to as the 'crownhold land') or any part of that land will be granted except with the written consent of the Commission; and
- (b) a covenant for securing that, in the event of any proposal to sell the crownhold interest in the whole or part of the land the Commission will have a right of pre-emption.

Where the disposition proposed to be made by the person entitled to the crownhold interest extends to the whole of the crownhold land in which he has that interest, the Commission's right of pre-emption will extend to the whole of that interest; but where the proposal is to dispose of part only of the land comprised in the crownhold interest, the right of pre-emption will, at the option of the Commission, be exercisable in respect of that part or in respect of the whole of the interest.

The price to be paid by the Commission on the exercise of a right of pre-emption in respect of the whole or part of crownhold land will be a sum equal to the compensation which would be payable by the Commission in respect of it if (i) the covenant conferring the right of pre-emption were broken, and (ii) the Commission executed a vesting declaration under section 21 in respect of the crownhold interest in the crownhold land.

A crownhold covenant contained in a disposition relating to land other than registered land may be registered as a restrictive covenant under section 10 of the Land Charges Act 1925, and a crownhold covenant contained in a disposition relating to registered land may be registered as a land charge under section 59 (2) of the Land Registration Act 1925. Where a covenant has been registered, it will be binding upon every successor of the covenantor if it would not otherwise be binding on such successor (section 19).

Breach of crownhold covenant

Where a crownhold covenant has been broken the Commission may serve notice on any person entitled to the crownhold interest in the whole or part of the crownhold land and on any person entitled to a tenancy created out of the crownhold interest:

- (a) specifying the covenant and the matters in respect of which it is alleged to have been broken;
- (b) stating that after the end of the period specified in the notice (not being less than six weeks from the date of service of the notice) the Commission propose to execute a vesting declaration in respect of that person's interest unless before the end of the specified period he serves a counter-notice on the Commission; and
- (c) stating whether the Commission propose to execute such a vesting declaration in respect of the whole or part of the land in which that person's interest subsists.

A counter-notice may object to the Commission's proposals on one or more of the following grounds:

- (a) that the crownhold covenant has not been broken as alleged;
- (b) that if the covenant has been broken, the breach does not relate to any part of the crownhold land in which the person serving the counter-notice has an interest; and
- (c) that in the circumstances he ought to be relieved against the execution of a vesting declaration.

Where a counter-notice has been served and not withdrawn, the Commission will not be able to execute a vesting declaration without leave of the County Court. In the case of (a) or (b) above, the Court will grant relief if the objection is well-founded. In the case of (c) above, it will grant relief, either unconditionally or on terms as to costs, expenses, damages or otherwise if, having regard to the conduct of the parties and to all the other circumstances, it is just and equitable to do so (section 20).

For the purpose of assessing compensation in respect of a crownhold interest in land which is vested in the Commission by a vesting declaration no account will be taken:

- (a) of any increase in the value of that interest which is attributable to the carrying out of development in contravention of a crownhold covenant or to any prospect of carrying out such development; or
- (b) of any diminution of the value of that interest which is attributable to a right of pre-emption in favour of the Commission;

and no compensation will be paid for damage sustained by reason that the land in which the crownhold interests subsists is severed from other land held with it, or for disturbance or any other matter not directly based on the value of land or of an interest in land.

Where, before the execution of a vesting declaration, a crownhold interest is subject to a right of pre-emption conferred on the Commission by a concessional crownhold disposition, then, if the vesting declaration extends to the whole of the land in which the crownhold interests subsists, the compensation payable in respect of that interest will be reduced by the sum specified in the disposition, in accordance with section 18 (3). In any other case the compensation will be reduced by so much of that sum as, on a proper apportionment of that sum as between the land comprised in the declaration and the remainder of the land comprised in the disposition, is attributed to the land comprised in the declaration (section 21).

Supplementary provisions

Where, by a planning decision made on or after the second appointed day, a planning permission is granted for the carrying out of material development on any land, any person entitled to a material interest in that land may, within three months from the planning decision, serve a notice on the Commission requiring them to elect whether or not to acquire the land. Within three months after the date of service of such notice the Commission must serve a counter-notice on that person stating whether or not they propose to acquire the land. A counter-notice that the Commission do not propose to acquire the land may be made subject to a condition that the development for which the planning was granted is begun or completed within a specified period, or to such other conditions as may be prescribed.

Where a counter-notice states that the Commission propose to acquire the land, then:

- (a) that land will, for the purposes of section 6 (1), be deemed to be land which, in the opinion of the Commission, is suitable for material development; and
- (b) unless before the end of twelve months from the date of service of the counter-notice the Commission have entered into a binding contract to purchase the owner's interest in that land, the Commission must before the end of that period prepare in draft a compulsory purchase order for the acquisition of that land.

If the Commission serve a counter-notice stating unconditionally that they do not propose to acquire the land, or serve a counter-notice stating that subject to one or more conditions they do not propose to acquire the land and those conditions are complied with, or they fail to serve a counter-notice, the Commission will not be entitled to acquire the land compulsorily for a period of five years from the date of service of the counter-notice or the date on which the time allowed for serving the counter-notice has expired (section 22).

Section 25 exempts the Commission from the payment of stamp duty in respect of transactions to which the Commission is a party.

STATEMENT ON AUDITING

Verification of Debtor Balances

Confirmation by Direct Communication

The following is the text of the new Statement on Auditing issued by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, to which reference is made in the proceedings of the Council reported elsewhere in this issue.

The verification of balances by direct communication with debtors is an established practice in some countries, and its use in the United Kingdom is increasing.

The Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales issues for the guidance of members the following statement on the principles underlying the verification of debtor balances by direct communication. The statement relates primarily to audits under the Companies Act 1948, though the principles may be adapted to suit the circumstances of other types of audit.

The statement is directed towards the verification of trade

debtors and is not intended to deal with particular circumstances which may arise in the verification of balances with subsidiary or associated companies, loans or other special debts.

The Council emphasizes that the adoption by auditors of procedures for confirming debtor balances by direct communication is not to be regarded as implying any weakness or irregularity in the internal control or accounting system of the company concerned; such procedures should be recognized as one of the normal means by which auditors may seek to satisfy themselves as to the accuracy of debtor balances.

THE practice of verifying debtor balances by direct communication should be seen in the light of the principles set out in 'Statement on Auditing No. 1' (General Principles of Auditing). For convenience, paragraphs 5, 7 and 9 of that statement are reproduced here in their entirety:

'Responsibility for the accounts and financial control of a company rests upon the directors. Their statutory duties include responsibility for ensuring the maintenance of adequate records and the preparation of annual accounts showing a true and fair view required by the Act. They are responsible for safeguarding the assets of the company and are not entitled to rely upon the auditors to protect them from any shortcomings in carrying out their responsibilities.

'If the directors have carried out their duty properly the detailed checking by the auditors will be limited to appropriate tests which, if suitably planned, may extend to only a small proportion of the total transactions unless the company is a small organization on which the scope for internal control is limited. If on the other hand the directors have not carried out their duty properly this will have a material bearing on the terms of the auditor's report and may well involve the auditors in extensive checking, at the expense of the company, but it is not their function to act as a substitute for proper management control.

'The auditors should aim to reduce their detailed checking to the minimum consistent with the system of internal control and the state in which they find the records. If their inquiries and tests satisfy them that the system is sound in principle and is carried out in practice then no useful purpose is served by extensive detailed checking. If on the other hand the system is not sound or is not properly carried out then the auditors must first reach a conclusion as to the nature of the shortcomings before they can decide upon the nature and extent of the detailed checking which they should undertake. Auditors should therefore direct their attention in the first instance to the system of internal control.'

2. The nature and extend of the detailed checking which auditors should undertake are matters for individual judgement in the light of their knowledge and experience of the client's affairs. In the absence of any similar properly controlled procedure carried out by the company itself, the auditors should consider direct communication with debtors as one of the means by which they can form an opinion as to the adequacy of the system of internal control over sales and its operation in practice. It may also be useful as a check on the accuracy of the cut-off procedures for balance sheet purposes and may help to draw attention to irregularities. Where the auditors are not satisfied that the system is sound or properly carried out the test will be useful in ascertaining whether the balances are genuine, accurately stated and not in dispute.

3. The decision to request the client to carry out a test circularization of debtors should not be construed as an assumption by the auditors of the directors' duties. Circularization is essentially an act of the client, who alone can authorize third parties to divulge information to the auditors. If a suitable approach is made the client's agreement will generally be forthcoming. Should the client refuse this will inevitably lead the auditors to consider whether they should qualify their report as they may not be able to satisfy themselves, by means of other audit checks, as to the validity and accuracy of the debtor balances. In general, the weaker the internal control the more important it is to obtain external confirmation of debtor balances. The circularizing of debtors on a test basis should not be regarded as replacing other normal audit checks, such as the testing in depth of sales transactions (see Statement on Auditing No. 1, paragraph 17), but the results may influence the scope of such tests.

4. When circularization is undertaken the method of requesting information from the debtor may be either positive or negative. Under the positive method the debtor is requested to confirm the accuracy of the balance shown or state in what respect he is in disagreement. Under the negative method the debtor is requested to reply if the amount stated is disputed. In either case the debtor is requested to reply direct to the auditor. Both methods may be used in conjunction.

5. Weak internal control, the suspicion of irregularities or that amounts may be in dispute or the existence of numerous book-keeping errors are circumstances which indicate that the positive method is preferable as it is designed to encourage definite replies from those circularized. However, it will almost certainly be found in practice that certain classes of debtors, e.g. overseas customers and Government departments, either cannot or will not respond. Nevertheless it is desirable, where the auditors judge it appropriate, to attempt verification, preferably by the positive method, but this should always be carried out in conjunction with such other audit tests as may be appropriate.

6. Good internal control, with a large number of small accounts, would suggest the negative method as likely to be appropriate. However, in some circumstances, e.g. where there is a small number of large accounts and a large number of small accounts, a combination of both methods, as noted above, may be appropriate.

7. It is seldom desirable to circularize all debtors and it is therefore necessary to establish an adequate sample, but if this sample is to yield a meaningful result it must be based upon a complete list of all debtor accounts. In addition, when constructing the sample, the following classes of account should receive special attention:

- (a) old unpaid accounts;
- (b) accounts written-off during the period under review; and
- (c) accounts with credit balances.

Similarly, the following should not be overlooked:

- (d) accounts with nil balances; and
- (e) accounts which have been paid by the date of the examination.

8. The request sent to debtors may be either a specially prepared form of letter or an attachment to the client's normal statement giving a copy of the debtor's ledger account for an appropriate period and, in the case of a 'positive' request, being accompanied by a pre-paid reply form.

9. Whilst companies may be expected to favour circularizing debtors for audit purposes on the form of statement normally in use, it is to be preferred that the debtor should be sent a copy of his ledger account for an appropriate period as shown in the client's books as by this means it is more likely that errors and fraud will be detected. This can be particularly useful where running accounts are maintained, possibly involving large amounts and many entries, e.g. contracting work, or where there is evidence that accounts are in dispute or are not being settled in accordance with the client's terms of trade.

10. The statements will normally be prepared by the client's staff from which point the auditors, as a safeguard against the possibility of fraudulent manipulation, must maintain strict control over the checking and dispatch of the statements. Precautions must also be taken to ensure that undelivered items are returned, not to the client, but to the auditors' own office for follow up by them.

11. When the positive request method is used the auditors must follow up by all practicable means those debtors who fail to respond. After two, or even three, attempts to obtain confirmation a list of the outstanding items will normally be passed to a responsible company official, preferably independent of the sales accounting department, who will arrange for them to be investigated; this does not of course absolve the auditors from satisfying themselves that the clearance procedure is properly carried out and from examining the results. Where there is any limitation in the follow up procedure it is all the more important to apply other auditing tests to establish that there existed a valid debt from a genuine customer at the date of the verification.

12. Whether there is a satisfactory rate of response or not, any inaccuracies revealed by the circularization or by the additional tests mentioned in paragraph 11 may have a bearing on other accounts not included in the original sample. In these circumstances the auditors will have to consider what further tests they can make in order to satisfy themselves as to the correctness of the customers' balances taken as a whole. A tabulation of the results of the test by number and by value may help the auditors to form a view as to the adequacy of the work already carried out.

Latest Computer Development

IT is reported from Canada that Burroughs Corporation has been chosen by a U.S. agency to design a computer 500 times faster than any current system. The system will be called ILLIAC IV and will have four control units interacting with more than 250 arithmetic units, as contrasted with the present computers which have one control unit interacting with one arithmetic unit. The large increase in computing capabilities is significant for simulation, modeling, and signal processing, as in the simulation of the atmosphere for weather prediction or of extremely complex military logistics problems. The University of Illinois, the Government agency's main contractor for parallel processing computer research, will negotiate the multi-million contract.

Burroughs is reported also as having announced a new information entry and visual display system, four to five times faster than any other system on the market. This input and display system makes the processing power and memory of the computer available to remote offices and working areas, with the fiftieth of a second average access time of the Burroughs data memory bank.

New Guide on Change of Auditors

IT FREQUENTLY happens that the major shareholders of a company dispose of their interests, thus bringing about a change in control or, more rarely, the location of a company's registered office or main business is transferred to another area. In such cases, as well as in other circumstances, it is not uncommon to find that the company's auditor resigns and another practitioner is appointed in his place.

In view of the fact that difficulties occasionally arise as a result of the newly appointed auditor being uncertain of his position in relation to the work performed by his predecessor, coupled with the fact that the first examination by the new auditor is often attended by difficulties that do not recur in subsequent years, the National Council of Chartered Accountants (S.A.) has issued a statement on the subject.

Previous audited accounts

The statement first deals with the problem of the extent of the acceptance by the incoming auditor of the accounts reported on by his predecessor. It is stressed that, provided no error is disclosed in the course of the examination of subsequent ledger entries, there is no necessity to qualify an audit report solely for the reason that the accounts of the previous year were audited by someone else; an automatic qualification in these circumstances might be construed as a criticism of the previous audited statements, leading to a loss of public confidence and possibly to a disruption of good professional relations between accountants. Furthermore, it is pointed out that in most instances it would be almost impracticable to attempt to verify the book value of all the assets and liabilities recorded in the previous balance sheet as such a procedure might involve a complete review and audit of the records of the company from its inception.

On the other hand, if the newly-appointed auditor's examination of entries subsequent to the date of the previous audited accounts brings to light any error as a consequence of which the results of the succeeding period are materially affected, he is advised to deal explicitly in the accounts with the ascertained facts and, if necessary, to frame his audit report accordingly.

In accordance with the South African Companies Act, a company's auditors are required to report each year, inter alia, on 'whether they have examined or satisfied themselves of the existence of the securities . . .'. (This particular requirement has no counterpart in the British Companies Act 1948.) It is affirmed that an incoming auditor is entitled to assume the physical existence of the assets reflected in a previous audited balance sheet but it is felt that he may, in practice, experience difficulty in identifying and verifying the assets at the end of the initial audit period for which he is responsible.

If the incoming auditor is satisfied that the relative internal control procedures are sound, he may be able to rely on the company's own records. On the other hand, if the records are found to be inadequate or in his opinion unreliable, then he is advised to seek access to the working papers of his predecessor, although it is reiterated that the outgoing auditor is under no obligation to disclose to a successor information about the client's affairs, nor in fact may he do so without the client's express authority. In the event that the incoming auditor is unable to reconcile the securities with the company's records, he is advised to qualify his report.

Changes in basis of accounting

A continuing auditor has no difficulty in ensuring compliance with the requirements of the Eighth Schedule in relation to the disclosure of any material respects in which the results of the period under review have been affected by a change in the basis of accounting. An incoming auditor, however, must necessarily consider the basis of valuation of assets as reflected in the last balance sheet reported on by his predecessor and compare it with that used in the balance sheet under review so that he may determine whether there has been any change in the basis of accounting which must be reported.

"There's a fortune in the idea—if only we had the capital to exploit it"

Sometimes it seems that the easiest stage of a real technical advance is the idea itself, and that the more difficult stages are its application, development and eventual marketing. For these stages finance is needed, and it is frustrating to conceive the idea and then be unable to raise the money to exploit it.

T.D.C. was formed to meet this need—to assist companies, associations or individuals who have made a substantial technical advance but are held up for finance at the commercial stage. If you think that T.D.C. could help, begin by sending for our booklet 'Capital for Technical Innovation'.

Trading stocks

Trading stocks (which term embraces raw materials, work in progress and finished goods) form the asset which will commonly require particular inquiry. Where complete stock records are maintained, there will be little, if any, difficulty in establishing the basis of valuation in use at the commencement of the period under review; the records would also manifest the company's policy in relation to matters such as obsolescence, which also require an auditor's consideration. If the stock records are inadequate then the new auditor will have to rely upon inquiry, observation, comparison of gross profit percentages and other ways of satisfying himself as to consistency in the basis of valuation, including, if possible, access to his predecessor's working papers. If he cannot satisfy himself as to the basis of valuation in use at the commencement of the period by any of these means, he has no choice but to qualify his report.

Other assets

Care must be exercised in regard to assets other than stock-in-trade to ensure that a consistent basis is applied in the making of provisions such as for depreciation of fixed assets or for doubtful debts, and also in the treatment of any other items where the basis of valuation may vary (e.g. the revaluation of loose plant and tools and similar assets) and where as a consequence the results of a particular period may be considerably affected.

Policy changes

If the change of auditor has come about as a result of a change of ownership and hence control of the company, it is possible that there will be accompanying changes in managerial policy relating to bases of valuation and depreciation of assets and the assessment of liabilities. Any such changes will almost invariably be effected in the initial trading period under the new control so that the new management can give themselves a 'clean slate'.

The new auditor must always be watchful of such adjustments lest they be made on an unduly conservative basis with a view to showing exceptionally good results in the years to come. All material adjustments must undoubtedly be specially disclosed in the accounts under review and should also be mentioned in the accompanying directors' report or chairman's statement. The new auditor must always attempt to ensure that the method of disclosing the results of adjustments following on policy changes is such that doubt is not cast on the truth and fairness of previous accounts unless such doubt is justified.

Changes of appointment during financial year

If an auditor is appointed during the course of a financial year because of the death, resignation, or other incapacity to continue, of the previous auditor, it will be necessary for him to investigate whether and to what extent he can rely on work of the current year already done and for him to exercise his own judgement on this point. Access to the previous auditor's programme and current working-papers file would be most helpful to the new auditor in this regard. To the extent, however, that he does not himself audit any portion of the current year's records, the new auditor must make an appropriate statement in his report.

Although reference has been made in the statement to audits pursuant to the Companies Act, it is emphasized that the same principles apply to all other audits both statutory and non-statutory.

Natal Society's First Autumn School

THE Natal Society of Accountants' first autumn school held at Hilton College, Natal, towards the end of April, was an outstanding success from all points of view.

Three papers were presented; the first two, the theme of which was 'The Winds of Change in Accountancy' were given respectively by Mr D. G. Shuttleworth, C.A.(S.A.), an industrial member of the Transvaal Society of Accountants, and Mr R. H. Button, C.A.(S.A.); F.C.A.; a practising member of the Natal Society. The third paper, entitled 'Financial Reporting' was presented by Mr P. Bloomfield, Business Editor of the Financial Mail, South Africa's well-known financial weekly journal.

A general discussion forum also formed part of the programme. These forums are always a popular feature with South African accountants as they afford every participant an opportunity of putting up his particular problem of the moment and hearing it debated and discussed by knowledgeable colleagues. On this occasion no less than forty-two problems were sent in for discussion and elucidation by a panel of four consisting of two accountants in public practice, one who is an executive in an industrial concern and one who has been a university professor for many years.

On the social side, the arrangements for the school, which was held during the Easter break, could not have been bettered. Hilton College is situated some twelve miles outside Pietermaritzburg, in most glorious scenic surroundings. The school's catering staff excelled themselves in coping with the seventy-five participants, to the majority of whom the experience of once again sleeping in schoolboys' beds in dormitories was a pleasant reminder of boyhood days. A church service conducted by the Reverend A. M. Gamley of Howick was held on the Sunday morning. A break was taken on the Sunday afternoon for bowls and golf. The official dinner on the Saturday evening at the Hilton Hotel was a lively affair.

Among those who attended the school were Mr M. G. Crosoer, C.A.(S.A.), F.C.A., Chairman of the Public Accountants' and Auditors' Board; Mr H. C. Twycross, C.A.(S.A.), F.C.A., President of the Transvaal Society of Accountants; Mr J. C. Newton, C.A.(S.A.), President of the Orange Free State Society of Accountants; Mr R. R. Webber, Secretary of the Public Accountants' and Auditors' Board, and Mr F. H. Woodhouse, Administrative Director of the National Council of Chartered Accountants (S.A.), together with chartered accountants from all parts of Natal and East Griqualand and one from Salisbury in Rhodesia.

GERMANY

New Audit Code

THE Institut der Wirtschaftsprüfer recently approved a code of generally accepted principles on auditing. The new rules – proposed by a subcommittee of the Institute's Professional Practices Committee – were published in Die Wirtschaftsprüfer (March), together with an introductory article by Dr Karl Schneider. He points out that as long as accounts have been audited in Germany auditors have followed principles and rules which have gradually evolved in the course of practical and professional experience, but there have hitherto been no fixed rules embodied in a written code. The increasing demand for clarity in accounts and the provisions of the new company law have made the need for recognized standards more apparent.

For a long time it has been easy to ascertain the principles followed in Anglo-Saxon countries, but their haphazard growth in Germany has made it difficult, both inside and outside that country, to find out exactly what the approved procedure is. Now this difficulty is removed. The draft rules were put before the members of the Institute and the public in May 1966 for criticisms and suggestions. The few that were made were discussed by the Council and the code now published represents expert professional opinion.

Among the fundamental rules which must be observed by auditors are: the examination of accounts to ensure that they are drawn up in accordance with legal requirements and proper methods of book-keeping; examination of the internal control system, and the layout and supervision of the drawing-up of the balance sheet and the obtaining of necessary explanations. Under company legislation the auditors are required to conduct an impartial and independent audit and must observe professional secrecy. The law assumes that it is not possible or desirable to regulate by statute every matter connected with the conduct of an audit, and provided he observes recognized principles the auditor must decide for himself in each case the nature and extent of the audit he carries out.

Investment Grants

Treatment of applications in respect of down payments and progress payments made to suppliers of assets under construction

The Board of Trade has issued the following announcement about the practice they propose to follow where claims for investment grant are made in respect of down payments and progress payments for assets under construction.

PARAGRAPH 124 (ii) of the Board of Trade booklet on investment grants explains that claims may be made in respect of progress payments as each payment is made. The intention in making this provision for paying grants on progress payments as they arose rather than to defer payment of grant until the asset had been completed (and thus 'provided' in the sense of the Industrial Development Act) was to avoid placing at a disadvantage those applicants whose capital equipment was built over a period of time instead of being bought outright 'off the shelf'. It is, however, implicit in this provision that the expenditure on which grant is paid shall be reasonably closely related to the amount of work done on the construction of the asset.

2. The Board of Trade recognize that there is a wide variety of contractual progress payment arrangements involving a down payment with order and a series of further payments which may either be related to the completion of specific stages of the work or to specified dates. In relation to each period for which claims are invited the Board will be prepared to accept claims in respect of payments made in advance of the completion or delivery of an asset when they consist of:

- (i) down payments which are made under normal contractual arrangements and which do not exceed 25 per cent of the purchase price of the asset;
- (ii) subsequent payments which reflect progress in the construction of the asset.

3. The application forms do not distinguish down payments and progress payments from hire-purchase and extended credit payments. On receipt of applications, therefore, the investment grants offices will be seeking further information direct from applicants to establish whether any of the expenditure on which grant is claimed is in respect of down payments or progress payments so as to ensure that grants are paid only in the circumstances set out at (i) and (ii) of paragraph 2 above.

4. Future reprints of the application forms will make provision for the identification of advance and progress payments.

Statistical record

THE statistical record has become an integral part of a company's annual report; in one form or another it appears in practically every set of published accounts. In some instances the record is nothing more than a re-statement of balance sheet and profit and loss account items and totals. This provides a record but gives nothing in the way of the extra information that thinking shareholders, commentators and investment analysts need. A mere running record of profits and assets is not enough.

This week's reprint of the accounts of Thomas C. Keay Ltd provides an example of statistical recording at the other extreme of the reporting scale. In the original, the two parts of the ten-year record cover virtually four quarto pages, the outside two being a 'fold out'. Large type is used and the clarity of presentation is of as high a quality as the information provided. The reprint shows the detail given - separated, and in smaller type for reasons of space and make up - and there is therefore no need to enumerate the various items.

Queen's award

The record allows the reader to look right inside the business and it is to be noted that the chairman in his statement to shareholders makes no reference to the accounts other than to remark that the rise of £22,800 to £274,230 in pre-tax profits was the result of 'another year's very satisfactory trading'.

The Thomas C. Keay Group manufactures jute textile and packaging machinery and is a 'Queen's Award' company for export achievements. The group does more than three-quarters of its business in the export market. In the last quarter of 1966 orders of more than £1 million were obtained, the bulk being for jute machinery for Pakistan.

An order for West Germany, however, is considered worthy of special note by the chairman. This was for paper-sack sewing machinery, ultimately destined for Russia, and amounted to £100,000, and is important as it is one of the lines into which the group has diversified in recent years.

This type of machinery has also been adapted for handling polypropylene sacks and further experiments within the group on the weaving and printing of this material are in hand. A prototype hessian and polythene laminating machine has been produced and trial runs have proved satisfactory.

Head office move

Expenditure on machine tool replacement during the year totalled £46,055, with £16,737 deducted for investment grants receivable. Building costs were £45,203, covering the major part of a works extension scheme. Machine tools to a value of £55,650 were on order at the end of the year.

A major move of head office and warehouse premises will have to be made because development in Dundee will mean the demolition of the present premises. Settlement has been agreed with the Dundee Town Council and the premises are to be evacuated by October this year. New office and warehouse accommodation is to be built at a cost of about £100,000-£150,000.

At first glance the special reserve is a peculiarity until it is seen that it is tied in with the Endowment Assurance Policy. It is intriguing, however, that in the 1965 figures the appropriation of £1,036 to revenue reserve (special) from profits apparently grew by £1 by the time it got to the reserve. The statistical record suggests that this phenomenon last occurred in 1958.

Oliver Rix

HAVING said at the beginning of these notes that the statistical record has become an integral part of company reporting, it was probably inevitable in the contrary way of things that the next set of accounts to come to hand failed to contain any information of this kind. The accounts were those of Oliver Rix Ltd, whose business is in agricultural and industrial equipment, car distribution and spare parts factoring and also in building.

Clearly the intention was to make the annual report something of a public relations exercise. The name 'Rix' covers the cover of the report; pictures abound, and one page is given over to the statement that 'Oliver Rix crops up everywhere'. But a statistical record fails to crop up anywhere and neither does any attempt to break down profits by divisions, although details of subsidiaries are grouped under agriculture, factors, garages and other activity headings.

Mr J. F. Nash, the chairman, says that during 1966 'we were able to fully implement the divisional structure and management I outlined in my last report'. Possibly the divisional structure will be fully implemented in the current year accounts in terms of turnover and earnings on a divisional basis. In the latest report there is not even a group turnover figure.

CITY NOTES

ALTHOUGH on earnings and dividend prospects, the equity market – in the considered opinion of a number of investment experts – is too high, the technical situation in the market is still likely to put the equity level higher yet. Shortage of shares in the market and the virtual complete absence of replenishment through new issues is one prime factor.

Another is the movement out of steel shares – quoted 'ex' the residual dividends – into other sections of the equity market. Even when last Monday week share prices were marked down heavily on the outbreak of the Middle East war, the only immediate response was for buyers to come in at the lower price levels.

Yet another factor is the impact of take-over operations which, besides providing a hopeful basis for holding shares, also have the effect of taking shares off the market through the substitution of shares by loan stock in many instances.

Over and above these technicalities there is the firmly held view that economic policy is moving away from rigid defence of sterling and the balance of payments and towards a growing degree of reflation. Recent events have shown that the equity market is still in the position of being periodically marked down but persistently bought up.

CAPITAL gains tax places the 'all cash' take-over bidder at a disadvantage against the 'paper' bidder. Mardon International in its bid for John Waddington, the packaging and games group of Leeds, is finding this out. The 'Doomsday' price of Waddington 'B' shares is 15s 9d and Mardon's bid at 37s 6d (an increase of 5s 6d on the original offer) is still considered completely inadequate by the Waddington board.

Mardon is fifty/fifty owned by the British American Tobacco and Imperial Tobacco companies and, not being a quoted company, can only offer cash. The bid, therefore, has not only to be equated to Waddington's assets, earnings and prospects but also to the impact of capital gains tax on a compulsory sale. Another gains tax take-over bid element has developed in the battle over Bents Brewery, in which Bass Mitchells & Butlers have offered, mainly as an inducement to institutional acceptance, an equity alternative to a mainly loan stock bid. The worth of the equity alternative is considerably lower than the loan stock.

MIDDLE East events have demonstrated – at a decidedly awkward time – the vulnerability of sterling as a reserve currency and the burden Britain carries in its international banking role. Sterling's reserve currency position is recognized as one of the chief obstacles to British entry into the E.E.C. – President de Gaulle has made that clear enough. The latest turn of events could hasten the presently pedestrian move towards a new world currency formation in the sphere of international settlements – particularly if Arab withdrawal of sterling balances develops.

Election of President

Sir William Carrington, F.C.A.: Mr President, gentlemen, this is possibly the most important day in the Institute's calendar for it is the occasion on which we elect our leaders for the ensuing year, and that is an extremely responsible task, particularly so when you bear in mind what lies ahead.

There can be no standing still for human beings or human institutions. We either progress or decline, and I am quite confident that this Institute is progressing, under the inspiration and leadership of these eminent gentlemen whom you see before you this morning – handsome, hardworking, intelligent, versatile – every one of them.

In days gone by it was the custom for those charged with the responsibility of proposing and seconding members for election as President, Deputy President and Vice-President, respectively, to give a fairly detailed biographical sketch, accompanied by the record of their nominee's achievements inside and outside of this chamber. However, it has been decided in the interests of time and brevity, to shorten the proceedings and to have no speeches with regard to the election of the President or the Deputy President. By the time people have reached these positions they are sufficiently well known to the members of the Council to enable the latter to form a view as to their suitability for promotion.

The only speech in the pattern of previous years will be that proposing the Vice-President, as he will be coming from the body of the hall, so to speak.

When returning thanks for election, the new President will be at full liberty to inform the Council as to his hopes and aims for the future as President; and likewise the outgoing President will have the opportunity of reviewing, if he so wishes, the events of the past year and the lessons to be learned therefrom.

Gentlemen, it is now my very great privilege and pleasure to propose that Mr Walter Edmund Parker, C.B.E., F.C.A., be elected President for the ensuing year and I will ask Mr A. W. John to second the motion.

Mr A. W. John, C.B.E., F.C.A.: Mr President, it gives me great pleasure to second the motion that Mr Parker be elected President for the ensuing year.

The President: May I take it that this is approved in the usual way? (Acclamation.)

Mr W. E. Parker, C.B.E., F.C.A.: Thank you Sir William and Mr John for proposing and seconding my election; and thank you all members of the Council for the sign of confidence in me you have shown by endorsing the proposal. I think I should particularly thank Sir William on behalf of all the august gentlemen for his choice of adjectives to describe our virtues. I am very grateful also for the new brevity which is now being introduced into this part of these proceedings. I will myself be brief.

The very first thing I want to do is to pay my own personal tribute to Sir Henry Benson. (Hear, hear.) I must not anticipate what another member of the Council will be saying in a minute or two so perhaps I can convey to the Council and to you, Henry, what is in my mind by simply expressing my alarm – not to say panic – at the standard you have set for your successors.

Second, as to my own main task on your behalf in the year ahead, I see this not as being to give birth to new ventures but to help to maintain as best I can the impetus which Sir Henry has given to our activities in countless directions, but not least in our efforts to be of direct and real help to members and to work out wise and acceptable plans for the future shape and development of the accountancy profession.

That latter task will inevitably continue to be a major preoccupation. Added to it now is the rather tiresome business of meeting the requirements of the Monopolies Commission. I am afraid that this may prove to be time consuming for some of us, and certainly for the secretariat; but the preliminary study which we have made demonstrates, to me at any rate, that such restrictions and regulations as the Institute has imposed on its members and on its candidates for membership, have as their purpose not any selfish protection of ourselves but the protection of the public and the community and in that context are directed exclusively to the creation and preservation of three conditions – competence, independence and integrity. It seems to me that the demonstration of this publicly to the Monopolies Commission cannot fail to enhance public recognition of the qualities of this Institute. On that ground, I, for one, welcome the Commission's inquiry.

Finally, I would like to put on record now the aspect of our affairs which is closest to my own heart. This is the promotion throughout the Institute membership of the sense of professional brotherhood and the mutual trust and confidence and willingness to seek and to give mutual assistance which are at once the essence of brotherhood and its product.

It is right that, whether as practitioners or in other appointments we should compete with one another on merit; the public interest and our own professional good health undoubtedly require it. But competition on merit can properly and easily go hand-in-hand with a brotherly care for one another's professional well-being and with a mutual concern as individuals and as firms to help one another in the service which we give to the community.

I do not think that the heart of this matter can really be touched by rules and regulations; it lies much deeper in human attitudes and human understanding. The best approach to it therefore must be through human contact, and it is that aspect of all our national and local activities, communal activities of one kind or another – it is this aspect of those activities which I myself rate fully as high as any of their other objectives. Anything that I can do to further these human contacts during my year of office will be done not just willingly but eagerly. Thank you. (Acclamation.)

Election of Deputy-President

Mr S. John Pears, F.C.A.: Mr President and gentlemen, when Sir William Lawson proposed last year that Mr Stanley Dixon be elected Vice-President he gave a brief description of his qualifications and career and made it clear at that time that Mr Dixon was willing to assume the office of Vice-President but was not willing to attach his name to go forward for any further office at the end of that period.

Since that time, however, I think Stanley has thoroughly enjoyed his year of office. He has been able to rearrange his private and business affairs so that he is available to take on further responsibility.

I therefore have the very great pleasure in proposing that he be elected Deputy-President of this Institute. His election, which I am confident is assured, will confirm that this Institute covers not only practising members but members engaged in commerce and industry.

Mr R. O. A. Keel, F.C.A.: Mr President, before seconding this proposal, may I offer my congratulations to you upon your election.

I have the greatest pleasure in seconding Mr Pears's proposal that Mr Stanley Dixon be elected as Deputy-President for the year 1967–68.

The motion was then put to the meeting and carried with acclamation.

Mr Stanley Dixon, M.A., F.C.A.: Thank you very much, Mr President. I thought I should be the first, but may I be the second to offer you my congratulations and good wishes for your year of office.

It was in 1954 that one Ted Parker took his seat next to me on the Taxation and Research Committee. I count it a very great privilege that in 1967, as you take your seat in the Presidential Chair, I should be the one chosen to sit next to you.

Thank you, Mr Pears and Mr Keel, for proposing and seconding this resolution.

I am indeed a little surprised that you should have chosen as your Deputy-President one so infirm of purpose as myself; one who, as Mr Pears has reminded you, said one thing last year and does something entirely different this year.

A word of explanation is, I am sure, necessary. The great kindness which I have received from every member of the Council, especially from Sir Henry Benson, as President, and Sir William Carrington and all the Past-Presidents; the assistance so readily given by all the secretariat; the extraordinary warmth of the reception which I found in my journeyings to the district societies and branches all up and down the country for the idea that a member of the Council in industry and from one of the district societies should hold high office; the generous co-operation of my chairman and fellow directors and the staff of my company which has enabled me to give so much time to Institute matters; and, not least, the forbearance of my wife who has cheerfully laid aside our plans for an early retirement into obscurity, all these factors actually experienced during the past twelve months have convinced me that that which appeared quite inconceivable a year ago is at least within the realm of practical politics. Thank you very much. I trust that I shall be found worthy of the great amount of goodwill which I am quite certain awaits me. (Acclamation.)

Election of Vice-President

Mr W. Guy Densem, F.C.A.: Mr President, may I first offer my congratulations to you and also to the Deputy-President and wish you both good health and a happy and successful year of office.

Gentlemen, it is my privilege today to propose the appointment of our Vice-President. Our Institute faces great activity, not only in relation to legislative matters such as the Companies Bill, but in future plans which are of supreme importance to the long-term well-being of our profession.

The Past-Presidents were fortunate in finding available someone whom they could unanimously decide was eminently suitable – both in ability and experience – to give invaluable assistance as Vice-President. I refer to Mr Ronald George Leach.

Mr Leach gave early proof of his abilities by being in the Honours List in the 1931 Final Examinations. In 1938, he was admitted as a partner in Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co, in which firm he had served his articles. The war then intervened.

He was Deputy Financial Secretary to the Ministry of Food from September 1939 to June 1946, being awarded the C.B.E. in 1944 and was appointed in 1959, Chairman of the Consumer Committees under the Agricultural Marketing Acts.

Since his election to the Council in January 1963, he has served with distinction on various committees, including the General Purposes and Finance, Overseas Relations, and Parliamentary and Law, of which he has been Vice-Chairman and Chairman. He has also been closely concerned with Future Plans. I am glad to say that he also knows something of the more obscure ethical problems having served for two years on the Investigation Committee.

I am confident that he will continue to serve us well, and so, Mr President, I have great pleasure in proposing that he be elected Vice-President, and I will ask Mr Stanley Kitchen to second.

Mr Stanley Kitchen, F.C.A.: It is with the greatest possible pleasure, Mr President, that I second Mr Densem's proposition that Mr Ronnie Leach be elected Vice-President for the ensuing year.

The motion was carried with acclamation.

Mr Ronald Leach, C.B.E., F.C.A.: Mr President, this is a very proud moment for anyone who has been a member of this Council. I am very moved; very proud and also very humble that you have chosen me for this office. I will do everything within my ability to further the work of the Institute during the coming year which will be a very important one, I think, in its history. I am deeply grateful for the very kind things Mr Densem said about me, which were supported by Mr Keel.

I would like to offer my own congratulations to our new President and say I could not be happier than to serve under such a President. The pace set by our Immediate Past President, as has been said, is going to be very difficult to follow – we are all going to have to run pretty hard – but fortunately in Mr Parker we have someone who is also exceptional in this respect. His work for the Institute has been proved many times in the past and his personality is such that we are all deeply attached to him and he will have all the support I can possibly give him. Thank you very much. (Acclamation.)

Vote of Thanks to Retiring President

Mr W. W. Fea, B.A., F.C.A.: Mr President, may I add my congratulations most sincerely for your election, and also to my friends Mr Dixon and Mr Leach whom we are all so glad to see sitting with you.

This is the second occasion on which an official invitation from the Institute – perhaps I should say a command – has come to me accompanied by an admonition.

The first occasion was about nine years ago when I received an invitation to be one of two speakers on a certain subject at an autumn conference at the Festival Hall. The admonition then was 'to let my hair down'. When I tell you that the other speaker – the subject was 'the future role of the accountant' – was Mr Benson (as he then was) and he had the same admonition, I think you will agree that the Institute had not then parted from its long established tradition of not taking risks. (Laughter.)

How much has changed in the Institute in those nine years, and not the least its attitude to taking risks. And it is Sir Henry Benson who has increasingly become the mainspring of this change. Integration with the Society; rebuilding of our headquarters; the increasing emphasis on management accounting through the initiation of the Certificate and the Joint Diploma; enlargement of the Council's industrial membership – these are a few of the more striking changes initiated or completed before Sir Henry's presidency. All reflecting new attitudes and involving considerable risks. But the biggest change of all, involving the biggest risk – the great plan for the development of the accountancy profession in these islands – must be credited above all to Sir Henry, first as Chairman of the Future Plans Committee and then as President.

Moreover, it is not only the proper assumption by this Institute of leadership in the domestic accounting scene which we owe so largely to Sir Henry. It is his initiative and drive – at no small personal cost – as the implications of about fifty thousand miles of overseas travel suggest – which is bringing to us world leadership. I pray that this Council will not shirk the burdens which will result. Too much of the world around us is seeing the evil consequences of refusal to face the responsibilities of leadership. Human affairs do not progress without brave decisions taken by leaders of brave people.

Now this is indeed an occasion on which I should like to 'let my hair down' – to declaim, but I am no orator, to certify, but I am no auditor, all that Sir Henry has done during his term of office. But, as I mentioned earlier, there was an admonition accompanying this invitation and that I can now reveal was 'be brief'.

How sensible and yet how inappropriate. For to recount all Sir Henry's achievements would require not only a more gifted tongue than mine but the postponement of the entire agenda.

I must therefore rest content with a few words of thanks, both for myself and also, I am sure, for all of you, to the man behind the President. The man who combines a startling efficiency of conduct of business – 'never in the field of Institute affairs was so much transacted by so many in so few minutes' – with kindness and consideration for the individual and withal a nice touch of unforced humour at the right moment. If the presidential mantle has sometimes been awe-inspiring, when cast aside it has revealed the delightful personality many of us are proud to claim as friend.

So, gentlemen, it is my duty – a duty which I discharge with very real pleasure – to propose for your consideration, and, I am confident, unanimous acceptance, a very sincere vote of thanks to Sir Henry Benson. I believe he will rank as one of our very greatest Presidents, and I ask Mr Gordon Smith to second this proposal.

Mr H. Gordon Smith, F.C.A.: Mr President, gentlemen, it gives me very great pleasure to second Mr Fea's vote of thanks to the retiring President. I realize the necessity of brevity but, in order to make quite sure to Sir Henry that we are quite sincere, I suggest that the minutes of this meeting record the fact that this vote of thanks is carried not just unanimously, not merely with acclamation but with prolonged applause. (Prolonged applause.)

The President: That, Sir Henry, is an indication that the motion was carried. (Laughter.)

Now before I give you an opportunity to reply, I have, on behalf of the Council, a pleasant duty to perform which is to present to you the scrap-book which contains, in Press cuttings and so on, the record of many, if not most, of the events which have taken place in your momentous year of office.

When you yourself made the corresponding presentation for the first time a year ago and I was sitting beside you, I had a twinge of apprehension that as the years roll by there might be a President who would find this scrap-book something, perhaps, of a Chamber of Horrors, or (to borrow from Stephen Leacock) a collection of Moonbeams from the Larger Lunacy. (Laughter.) But I have no such apprehension about this scrap-book. It contains the very clearest evidence of the justification for the tributes which have been paid to you so rightly, and I hope that it will give you great pleasure and pride to have and to look at in the years to come. I present it to you, Henry, with the gratitude of every member of this Council.

Sir Henry Benson: Thank you, Mr Fea and Mr Gordon Smith, for the agreeable way in which you have proposed this resolution. Human nature being what it is, I suppose I shall readily convince myself that it is all true (laughter) but I hope that common sense will eventually prevail and I shall accept, I think, the more realistic attitude of the secretariat which has been pointing out with rather noticeable frequency and emphasis in recent months that there is nothing so past as a Past-President. (Laughter.) The only thing that I have not been able to discover is whether the note in the secretariat's voice is sympathy for me or relief for itself. (Laughter.)

But before I step into the cold and refreshing waters of Lethe, I would like to thank the members of the Council for their support, the secretariat for its unfailing loyalty and efficiency and to you, Ted, my unstinted thanks for what you have done in support all through the past year; and I wish you with every sincerity my warmest wishes for a happy year of office. This also goes for the Deputy-President and the Vice-President. Thank you very much. (Applause.)

Retirement from the Council

It was learnt with much regret of the retirement from the Council of Mr Thomas Austin Hamilton Baynes, M.A., F.C.A., Birmingham, and Mr Joseph Howard Bell, B.A., F.C.A., Manchester.

Mr Hamilton Baynes had been a member of the Council since 1950 and Mr Bell since 1956.

Appointment to the Council

Mr Laurence Harvey Clark, F.C.A., London, was appointed to be a co-opted member of the Council for a term of five years.

Finance (No. 2) Bill 1967

It was reported that a memorandum of submissions on the provisions of the Finance (No. 2) Bill had been prepared jointly on behalf of the Institute, The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland and The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants and submitted to the Chancellor of the Exchequer with copies to the Chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue.

The Cheque that had to be Chased

"Can I see you a minute, Mr. Ambrose?"
A rather worried-looking Miss Bunting put her head round the door.

"Of course, Miss Bunting! What can I do for you?"

Jack Ambrose, the only working director of Ambrose Autocessories Ltd., put on his happy, hearty, boss-face but had a nasty feeling he knew what her next words would be. And he was right.

"It's Thursday and the Pettiford cheque hasn't arrived, Mr. Ambrose. I've been on to them but just get put through from one department to another."

"I see" said Jack Ambrose, thoughtfully. But of course he did not "see" at all. The fact was that they relied on getting the Pettiford cheque each Thursday to pay the week's wages. If it didn't arrive in time...

"I'll give Mr. Pettiford a ring. Leave it to me, Miss Bunting" he said, exuding a confidence he certainly didn't feel.

Time passed. After several calls and a lot of "holding the line" he'd done no better than Miss Bunting had. There was only one thing for it. He'd have to drive over there. A miserable journey, in pouring rain, and several hours completely taken out of his day. It was a damp, depressed director who arrived at Pettiford's—to find his invoice had gone astray but had since been traced, and they'd shortly have his cheque ready for him.

"This sort of thing must crop up all the time with small firms" he reflected, as he drove back through the relentless rain. "Better have a word with that accountant chap. There must be an easier way than this."

* * *

He was right. His accountant told him about Shield Factors' service which gives manufacturers and merchants an assured cash in-flow, the amount depending only on their sales. There are other benefits, too. As a Shield client, Jack Ambrose need never have another bad debt. He has been saved the cost and bother of ledger keeping, debt collection and account rendering. He can have access to additional finance when he needs it. And freed from his "Black Thursday" bogey he can spend all his time on production and sales—the job he's really in business for!

* * *

* Details of Shield service are given in this booklet: "Credit Factoring", a copy of which is waiting for you. Write or 'phone (asking for Mr. F. R. Salinger or for Mr. E. S. Davis) and it will be sent to you by return.

Mr R. G. Leach, the new Vice-President, addressing the Council; seated are the Secretary, new President and Deputy President.

Decimal Currency Board

It was reported that a letter had been sent on behalf of the Councils of the Institute, The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland and The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants to the Chairman of the Decimal Currency Board in reply to a letter asking for comments on certain aspects of the Board's terms of reference.

The Insurance of Plant qualifying for Investment Grants under the Industrial Development Act 1966

It was reported that the Fire Offices Committee in reply to questions raised on behalf of the Council have reached the conclusion that the Industrial Development Act 1966 does not affect the basis on which insurances, including reinstatement insurances, should be effected and have agreed:

- (1) that members of the Fire Offices Committee will not make a claim on any grant made under the Act to persons insured, who should continue to insure for the full value of the property concerned;
- (2) that members of the Fire Offices

Committee will settle claims without regard to grants which the insured may receive from the Board of Trade under the Act.

FINDING AND DECISION OF THE DISCIPLINARY COMMITTEE

Finding and Decision of the Disciplinary Committee of the Council of the Institute at a hearing held on 3rd May 1967

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that Gordon Lewis Chick, a Fellow of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, had been guilty of acts or defaults discreditable to a member of the Institute within the meaning of clause 21 sub-clause (3) of the supplemental Royal Charter in that being the liquidator of a limited company (In Voluntary Liquidation) he failed within a reasonable time (a) to implement his assurance to the Institute that he would arrange with the Board of Trade for the settlement of the outstanding matters relating to the said liquidation and in particular to deal with a balance in his hands of £87 7s 7d (b) to submit statements of account to the Registrar of Companies in accordance with the provisions of section 342 of The Companies Act 1948 in respect of any period subsequent to that ending on 15th June 1963 (c) to pay to the Board of Trade the sum of £54 0s 2d being the costs awarded against him in pursuance of an Order of the Chancery Division dated 20th February 1964 and a Taxation Certificate of the same Division dated 25th November 1964 relating to the said liquidation, so as to render himself liable to be excluded or suspended from membership of the Institute or to be reprimanded or admonished. The Committee found that the formal complaint against Gordon Lewis Chick, F.C.A., had been proved under all headings and the Committee ordered that Gordon Lewis Chick, F.C.A., of 19 Glynrhondda Street, Cathays, Cardiff, be excluded from membership of the Institute.

UNION OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANT STUDENTS' SOCIETIES
National Executive Committee Meets

The National Executive Committee of the Union of Chartered Accountant Students' Societies was formed in recent months to relieve the pressure on the annual conference of the sixty delegates from all over the United Kingdom and to act rapidly on the many subjects which are submitted to them.

At their fifth meeting held on May 19th the matters discussed ranged over a wide field including: the publication on June 1st of the first number of The Student Accountant; the financial year-end of member societies; the consideration of regular reports from all member societies; the National Union of Students and the results of a meeting between members of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and members of the N.E.C. in March. The subjects then included the education of articled clerks; the Members' Hand-book; sitting professional examinations in hospital; grants for students; and many other matters of prime interest to all articled clerks.

OFFICIAL RECEIVERS'
APPOINTMENTS

The Board of Trade has announced the following appointments, effective from May 30th, 1967:

Mr Norman Saddler, to be an Official Receiver in Bankruptcy attached to the High Court; Mr Robert Frank Howe, to be Principal Inspector of Official Receivers attached to the Office of the Inspector-General in Bankruptcy (London); Mr Christopher Albert Taylor, to be Principal Clerk in Bankruptcy attached to the Office of the Inspector-General in Bankruptcy (London); Mr John Lewis Williams, to be an Official Receiver for the purposes of the Companies Act 1948, and attached to the High Court.

The former appointment of each official was revoked on May 30th.

When they say they're looking for a good interest rate and security, isn't the best answer Building Societies?

Building Society interest rates are income tax paid. This is something would-be investors have a habit of overlooking. A pity. Because a Building Society rate is often equivalent to the 'before tax' rates quoted for other forms of investment. And on the subject of security: what could be safer than investment in owner-occupied property? Five more excellent reasons for saving with a Building Society make up the 'Big Seven'. You won't find them together anywhere else.

ONLY BUILDING SOCIETIES GIVE YOU THE 'BIG SEVEN' BENEFITS

1. Utmost security, because the money goes into the most solid of all investments: owner-occupied property.
2. Interest on a range of savings schemes is equivalent to more than 7% for the standard rate taxpayer because . . .
3. . . . income tax is paid by the Building Society.
4. Freedom from market fluctuations.
5. Easy withdrawals at short notice.
6. No charges, no expenses.
7. Over-the-counter service: swift, efficient and friendly.

What happened to the Chartered Accountant who became a Sales Manager?

Chris Everett worked for a firm of chartered accountants for six years, passed his A.C.A. examinations and then spent three years in the Army, gaining a commission on the way. Looking around for a brand-new career with interesting possibilities he joined Burroughs at 25 as a trainee Consultant Representative. In 1965 his total earnings were £2,500. Today at 30, he's earning over £3,000 a year, and has just been promoted to a Sales Management assignment. Exceptional? By no means. Burroughs always promote from within. ☐ If you're between 22-30, with the ability to communicate ideas fluently, this could be the career you have been looking for. As a Consultant Representative you would deal with your own clients at management level, advising them on business systems and financial matters. Here your special knowledge of accountancy could help considerably—and prove very rewarding. Among the new systems you would help to introduce would be the remarkable Burroughs ABC accounting machine which converts from sterling to decimals and back again at the flick of a switch. Burroughs will train you stage by stage, starting at not less than your present salary.

Interested? Then write, giving full details, to Mr. J. A. R. Dakin, Personnel Manager, Dept. ACJ16, Burroughs Machines Ltd., Heathrow House, Bath Road, Cranford, Middlesex. SKYport 6522.

AN IMPORTANT NEW BOOK
FOR MANAGEMENT — RECENTLY PUBLISHED

FINANCIAL INFORMATION FOR EXECUTIVE MANAGEMENT

by N. THORNTON, F.C.W.A., A.M.B.I.M., M.I.O.M.

ANOTHER BOOK
IN THE GEE'S
SERIES

Efficient Management — that is the great challenge to Industry and Commerce and the author has written this book with the object of explaining the development of an efficient financial information service for those whose job it is to prepare financial information for executive management.

Of particular value, are over eighty practical illustrations of accounting reports, applicable to many types and sizes of business, and based on a research project started in 1964 at the Manchester College of Commerce where the author is Senior Lecturer in Management Accounting.

Useful appendices on report preparation, reproduction, the use of charts, and the committee system in the interpretation and use of information, complete a practical book for the manager and accountant.

Students studying for examinations in the subject will find the contents of this book of assistance particularly for the Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services, administered by the three Institutes of Chartered Accountants of the United Kingdom and Ireland, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants and The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, also for the Certificate in Management Information sponsored by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, and The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland.

for professional advisers from EXTEL

Capital issues with adjusted stock market prices

The second edition of Extel's successful new service is now available. This covers the fiscal years 1965/66 and 1966/67, and will be supported during 1967/68 by three cumulative supplements in July, October and January—also introducing adjustment factors for application to base values on any date since 6th. April 1965.

The service may now be regarded as an authority on the valuation of quoted securities for Capital Gains Tax purposes. It has been ordered by the Inland Revenue for use in every local Tax Inspector's office throughout the United Kingdom.

Subscription for the 1967/68 fiscal year: £10.

Dividends

In response to increasing demand from professional advisers, Extel is introducing at the beginning of the fiscal year a new annual record of dividend payments.

Contained in a separate bound volume, every Company quoted on any U.K. Stock Exchange will be listed in alphabetical order, together with details of the dividend payments on both Preference and Ordinary Share Capital. Companies passing their dividends will also be shown in their appropriate place in the alphabetical list.

The record will contain:—

Details of stock—details of dividend expressed as a percentage rate and an amount per share—dates for declaration, entitlement, payment and ex-dividend. Scrip and rights issues will also be indicated as a further useful guide.

The first volume of the dividend record will cover dividends paid during the 1966/67 fiscal year.

POST OF THE WEEK

A composite one this week. In fact it should not really be post of the week but men of the week.

These men are needed to fill senior appointments in engineering, process industries, distillers, brewers and computer manufacturing. Locations include North and Central London, North Kent, Middlesex and the West Country.

The importance of these positions should not be underestimated. A fully recognised qualification is essential coupled with appropriate financial and management accountancy experience. Above average personalities only are suitable.

All this would be demonstrated by the fact that unless you are earning £2,000 p.a. by age 28 and £3,500 by 45 you are not likely to be considered.

Applications in strict confidence to:
David J. Wilkinson.

TASK FORCE

We wish to recruit our own staff semi-seniors for temporary work. Age is immaterial but successful applicants will have above-average personalities and ability.

Man to see: Brian W. Danes.

OVERSEAS

A rich diversity of positions in commerce, industry and the profession exists throughout the world: Brussels, Hamburg, Paris, Milan, Los Angeles, Nassau, Johannesburg, Hong Kong, Singapore, Addis Ababa, Toronto, New York, are a few of the current locations. Salary range £2,000-£9,000 p.a. plus generous benefits.

Overseas consultant: Julian Charlton.

The firm provides formal training under the direction of a full-time training officer.

There will be opportunities to travel abroad on short- or long-term assignments.

Applications should be addressed to the Staff Partner, 33 Gutter Lane, London EC2, and should indicate the part of the country in which the applicant would like to work.

QUALIFIED ACCOUNTANTS

Thornton Baker & Co have vacancies in London and many provincial centres for both newly-qualified and more experienced accountants.

The positions offer the opportunity to obtain experience in a wide range of professional work or to specialize if desired.

Commencing salaries are good and will be commensurate with the degree of ability and responsibility of the applicants. The firm operates a contributory pension scheme.

Applications should give full details of age, education, qualifications and experience, and the centre preferred and should be addressed to: The Staff Partner, Lee House, London Wall, London EC2.

TAXATION

Chartered Accountants seek assistance in their specialised taxation department, which covers a wide range of work. The practice, which is substantial and expanding, is situated in the West End of London. Salary levels, naturally depending on experience, are excellent, and Luncheon Vouchers are given. Holiday arrangements this year will be met. Applications are invited from young people with not less than 3 years' experience in the field of either personal or company taxation. - Box TC 7794.

TAXATION OPPORTUNITIES

Birmingham office of International firm of Chartered Accountants have the following vacancies in their taxation departments:

TAXATION MANAGER to head a small group of staff within the department. SECOND EDITION 1967

By N. E. Mustoe, Q.C., M.A., LL.B.

For this new edition, Mr Mustoe has covered all the latest developments, and many new practical examples are included to illustrate the text. Part I deals with the law special to close companies and Part II covers corporation tax, capital gains tax, estate duty and investment grants - all general law applied to close companies. An appendix contains the relevant parts of the 1965-66 Finance Acts and also houses an extremely useful section of earlier statutes.

Is your present Pension Scheme completely flexible ?

When a company is growing rapidly, the staff situation tends to be more than usually fluid. Unfortunately many pension schemes are slow to react to changes, and staff relations can suffer as a result.

But with a privately administered pension plan, there need be no such time lag. This is the basis on which we work at Chase Manhattan. The pension plans we devise depend to a large extent for their effectiveness on a wise spread of investment and a minimum of administrative machinery. The result is complete flexibility.

Why not have a chat with us, let us show you how, in conjunction with an independent consulting actuary, a plan can be prepared to meet your organization's precise requirements. You'll discover just what an advantage it is to have a friend at Chase Manhattan.

BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION AND MANAGEMENT

by C. S. DEVERELL

M.A., B.Sc.(ECON.), B.COM., F.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M.

National Productivity Year was a singularly appropriate time for the appearance of this book, the more so as recent events have underlined the need to extend the most effective methods of management to the whole of our industry and commerce. Professional associations have recognized the urgency of this matter. Nor is the recognition limited to such bodies as the British Institute of Management and the Institution of Works Managers. The importance of business administration has been stressed in the revised examination scheme of the Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, the Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, the Chartered Institute of Secretaries, and the Corporation of Secretaries. At the same time, many colleges of technology and commerce have introduced courses leading to Diplomas in Business Studies which require a knowledge of modern management techniques. University students engaged on B.Sc. Economics or similar courses are expected to acquire a sound basic understanding of the field. They, and all the students pursuing the courses mentioned here, should find the book invaluable.

What will this accounting machine do when decimals come?

Make its point!

New NCR Point Range machines for instant conversion on your premises—free!

When the Government's plans for decimalisation come into force in 1971, serious problems will face the business which has not planned ahead. Long delays in converting machines, costly interruptions to vital work, make-shift conversions which reduce the efficiency and value of equipment—all these could become very real possibilities for those who postpone vital decisions.

NCR has introduced a revolutionary scheme which enables you to solve these problems now. The unique Point Range of decimal adding and accounting machines is available to give you top-class sterling operation with the facility for instant conversion to decimals after the introduction of the new currency.

This operation will be carried out without charge on your own premises provided it is covered by an NCR maintenance agreement. No need to suspend operations in any department for days or weeks. No need to use temporary machines. No need to send your machine away for factory conversion.

Ask NCR now about solving your decimal conversion problems instantly and effectively. Provision has also been made to deal with existing equipment, and full details are available from NCR.

The NCR Point Range covers a wide range of cash registers, adding and accounting machines. It is backed by NCR's unequalled knowledge of business systems and all their unique practical experience gained in countries which have already switched to decimals. For advice on your decimalisation problem, send the coupon now to NCR.

To NCR Decimalisation Centre, 206-216 Marylebone Rd, London NW1
Please let me know more about the new NCR Point Range and NCR's plans to deal with decimalisation.

PRACTICAL TAXATION COURSES

each of three days' duration, dealing with Corporation and Capital Gains Tax (including Schedule D, Case VII). These will be held in the Company's self-contained lecture and discussion rooms at 53/56 Great Sutton Street, London EC1 (near to Aldersgate and Old Street stations), on:

JULY 5th, 6th, 7th, 1967*JULY 19th, 20th, 21st, 1967*AUGUST 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 1967

Each course will be divided into a number of small groups to discuss case studies based on practical situations and involving the preparation of answers. There will be discussion periods during which particular aspects of these taxes will be discussed. Persons who are accepted should send in not more than one problem for general discussion prior to attending.

This is the fourth year in which FOULKS LYNCH (CLASSES) LTD have provided these special courses for Practising Accountants, Company Accountants and others especially concerned with taxation problems, and it provides an opportunity for quick assimilation of the extremely complex matters arising from the Finance Acts of 1965 to 1967 inclusive.

On Countering Evasion

THE offer of an amnesty to taxpayers who have made false claims for personal allowances is another symptom of the strain under which the Revenue machine is currently labouring. This type of evasion is not new but higher taxation makes it more attractive. It is the simplest means of reducing tax liability and also the most difficult to detect – if the individual is consistent in completing his tax return. It is not, therefore, any false sense of relative justice that ensured the prosecution, and often imprisonment, in 1965–66 of eighty persons for making false claims for allowances and expenses, but only a round dozen for submitting false accounts and returns of income. It is self-evident that this is only the tip of the iceberg.

The chances of detection are limited by the increasing number of taxpayers dealt with by the P.A.Y.E. machine. Ten years ago 17.1 million individuals were chargeable to tax; by 1965–66 that figure had risen to 19.4 million. The increase was due partly to the 1.3 million increase in the number of taxpayers, but also to the diminishing number of them who were entirely relieved from tax by allowances – under 2.4 million in 1965–66 compared with 3.4 million in 1956–66.

The amnesty does not meet the cause of the growth in evasion which, as every practitioner knows full well, continues unabated. It is also a bad precedent. As the number of ordinary wage-earners brought within the scope of income tax has increased, and as tax rates have risen and the real value of allowances declined, many such taxpayers have been fortified in their dislike of a tax which, in the view of many, unreasonably deprives them of much of their hard-earned pay. Since the P.A.Y.E. machine is strained, not merely by the fact that many employers find it a nuisance and make work for their accountants or the Revenue by their omissions and errors of commission, the Revenue staff is finding it difficult to spend sufficient time on assessments to pick up the slips and errors which would in more normal times initiate inquiries.

Potentially an even more disturbing aspect of the present situation is the effect on taxpayer morale. People have a vague suspicion that not everyone pays his due to the Revenue; the latest announcement merely provides confirmation. One way to maintain taxpayer morale is to catch the offenders; but in the present state of the Revenue offices this is easier said than done. It would be better if more official energy and thought were devoted to an intelligent restructuring of the fiscal system rather than tolerating expedients such as tax amnesties.

Bank Charges Rising?

THE Prices and Incomes Board have not made a habit of recommending price increases, and of course they did not make any such recommendation expressly in their report on bank charges. But the implied recommendation was clear enough: both in commission charges and in loan interest the banks could put up their prices.

The Bank Charges Report, a general comment on which appeared in The Accountant of June 3rd, has now been fairly thoroughly mulled over by the financial Press. The consensus of opinion seems to be (a) that it did good work in shaking the banks' complacency, but (b) that most of its recommendations were based on insufficient study and are pretty suspect.

The banks' own immediate petulant reaction to the report probably contributed to (a), and certainly prompted Mr STEWART's threatening remarks the following week-end; the City still has a lot to learn about public relations, and the fact that the Government so soon afterwards did even worse, in the matter of the D-notices, should be no comfort to anyone. For (b) the report itself provided the evidence. On the matter with which it was principally concerned its recommendations deserve very careful study indeed.

To remind ourselves of the obvious: there are two forms of bank charges – commission for the operation of the account, and interest for the loan of money. The report was widely quoted as finding no evidence that commission charges are excessive. The detail underlying that general finding is more interesting than the finding itself. For the suggestion throughout this part of the report is that charges do not cover the cost of operating accounts. The alternative to bank balances as a means of settling debt is cash, and cash represents a cost to the community. Is there a case, the Board asked, for public subsidy to peg commission charges, an increase in which might produce a switch away from the cheque and back to cash? Pending an answer to that question they said that 'the banks would be justified in basing their charges... more closely on the costs involved'. That would clearly mean putting them up.

On loan interest the report was more complicated. The Board worried a lot about what they called the 'endowment' element in bank profits – the fact that the link between the banks' lending rates and Bank rate produces automatically high profits when Bank rate is high. (As was pointed out in our earlier comment, they do not seem to have been disturbed by the fact that bank profits are depressed when Bank rate is low.) Inasmuch as their recommendations were designed to end this 'endowment' they would tend to lower the rates charged for bank loans in times of high Bank rate – though it is not clear at what level Bank rate produces 'excessive' bank profits.

But another arm of the report – and one which the Board probably regarded as more important, concerned as it was that the banks should become increasingly competitive – recommended that the banks should compete for deposits against the other principal deposit gatherers. This means, of course, increasing the relatively unattractive rates offered on bank deposits – which in turn could obviously mean raising the rates charged for bank loans. The Board saw the possibility:

'We have also asked ourselves whether the absence of an agreed deposit rate need necessarily lead to an increase in lending rates. We consider that our recommendations might entail changes in the relative lending and borrowing rates of different institutions; but we regard the average of lending rates as broadly governed by forces unaffected by these recommendations. We also consider that there is scope, through the more effective utilization of branches and of clerical labour, for the banks to maintain their profit margins in relation to an increase in costs occasioned by an increase in borrowing rates'.

On branch use and on more efficient work handling the report says much elsewhere; and it says a good deal on other matters affecting more or less directly the level of interest rates. Not least it discussed, albeit in startlingly summary form, the very complex interaction of interest rates with national monetary policy.

Increased competition does indeed usually work for the benefit of the consumer, and, as the report points out, competition for advances, in the absence of an agreed rate structure, will operate to check the increase in lending rates that raised deposit rates might otherwise produce. But the complex monetary system that the Board would treat so roughly does include as one of its more important features bank loans at rates lower than those of other money-lenders.

Many of the banks' friends have for years past argued that these rates should be increased to enable the banks to compete more freely for deposits – which is the Prices and Incomes Board recommendation the other way round. It may be that this would be in the best interest of the banks and in the long run of the community at large and even of their customers in particular. But we might as well recognize the nettle we are asked to grasp. Borrowers who find their banks raising their interest rates may not find it a consolation to know that the average of lending rates remains unchanged.

Finance Bill in Committee – II

THE committee stage of the Finance Bill concluded this week, having been spread over some eight days of Parliamentary time.

One afternoon was devoted to the clauses on stamp duty, the opportunity being taken to urge the Government to abolish this 'barbaric tax'. However, the indications are that it will be with us for a long time yet. On a more modest note one member wanted the exemption limit for conveyances to be raised from the proposed £5,500 to £7,000, but he had no success either.

Clause 25 (2) was the subject of a proposed amendment which was withdrawn on a Government undertaking to look into the point. The sub-clause seeks to widen the exemption accorded to conveyances between certain companies in a group. It has long been a complaint that the exemption applies where the conveyance is from principal to subsidiary or vice versa or between fellow subsidiaries, but not, say, between 'grandparent' and 'grandchild'.

Thus if A owned 90 per cent of the capital of B and B owned 90 per cent of the capital of C, then a transfer from A to C does not qualify; nor would it qualify even if A owned 100 per cent of B and B owned 100 per cent of C. Consequently it is at present necessary to have two conveyances – one from A to B and the other from B to C, and to claim exemption on each conveyance. This is quite pointless. Clause 25 (2) (3) now provides for bringing indirect ownership, through intermediate companies, into account.

Clause 25 (4) seeks to counter an avoidance device. Where two companies are independent and one is about to convey property to another, the stamp duty may be so great as to make it worth while for the two companies to become associated for the short period while the conveyance is being executed. Afterwards, without there having been an express undertaking to that effect, the association can be discontinued. Under clause 25 (4) if the necessary association ceases within twelve months after the date of the conveyance, the duty which would have been paid but for the association is recoverable as a debt from the company which took the conveyance. Moreover this debt carries 5 per cent interest from the date of execution of the conveyance. A member sought to introduce an amendment to protect the case where there is a bona fide liquidation. The FINANCIAL SECRETARY promised to look at clause 25 (4) again.

There was a long debate on clause 26 which quadruples the duty imposed on loan capital by section 8 of the Finance Act 1899. At the same time the clause exempts the documents which secure the loan capital, provided that the 10s per cent loan capital duty has been paid. The exemption from loan capital duty which was accorded by section 29 of the Finance Act 1934 is at the same time cut down. The JOINT UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR ECONOMIC AFFAIRS made the following interesting statement:

'It should be borne in mind that the original exemption – the 1934 Act exemption – which is being abolished was granted so that associated companies might borrow from each other without incurring stamp duty. However, the draftsman of those days, who had not achieved the meticulous skill of modern Parliamentary draftsmen, drafted the wrong point. They drafted the provision so that there was exemption as long as a transaction was of such a description as to be incapable of being dealt with on the Stock Exchange. It does not seem to me that this is a very relevant point of distinction for the purpose of exempting loan stock'.

However, the UNDER-SECRETARY accepted that the provisions for exemption of short-term borrowings need to be looked into again to see that such borrowings were all brought into line and gave people a greater certainty in the application of the duty.

The Government introduced a new sub-clause (5) to clause 26. This imposes the duty on loan stock issued after the end of July (when the new rate comes into force) notwithstanding that the company has managed to deliver the statement of loan capital before then. In the words of the Government spokesman,

'somebody might issue a loan stock before August 1st and only collect his money afterwards. This provision will ensure that the full rate of 10s per cent will be payable on the money which is raised after August 1st' [he meant 'after July 31st'].

Notwithstanding this new clause, the Government spokesman said the whole clause would be redrafted.

Some slight amendments were made to clause 27 which exempts loan capital of local authorities from stamp duty. The object of clause 29 was explained; it is merely to allow banks to use franking machines for stamping foreign bills of exchange – a facility which may be extended at some future date to promissory notes, if the department is satisfied that there will be no loss or abuse.

On capital gains tax, the first proposition was that the rate be reduced from 30 per cent to 25 per cent, but needless to say this was not successful. It was pointed out that the top rate of 30 per cent applied only to about four hundred thousand surtax payers, the remainder paying at a low rate or perhaps nothing at all depending on their income. A drafting error in paragraph 10 of Schedule 13 was corrected. This paragraph deals with a lacuna in the original Finance Act 1965 and is retrospective to April 6th, 1965. Section 41 (2) of the 1965 Act provides for the imposition of tax on a resident member of a non-resident company in respect of capital gains made by that company, and for whom the company may pay the tax. Paragraph 10 of Schedule 13 in the new Bill provides that the amount so paid by the non-resident company is not to be taxed to income tax or corporation tax on the resident person. The draftsman of paragraph 10 evidently forgot about the capital gains tax itself which the correction now brings in.

A new and lengthy paragraph at the end of Part I of Schedule 13 was proposed by the Opposition but was rejected. This provided for the setting off of capital gains tax on death against the estate duty, as well as deducting the capital gains tax as a debt in arriving at the value of the estate. Attempts to make the election for valuation at April 6th, 1965, a revocable one were unsuccessful. The point was made that the time apportionment formula under paragraph 24 of Schedule 6 to the Finance Act 1965 gave reasonable justice and avoided the enormous burden of valuing everything as at April 6th, 1965.

On paragraph 5 of Schedule 13 the FINANCIAL SECRETARY uttered a stern warning – or perhaps it would be more correct to call it a threat. Paragraph 5 amends paragraph 18 of Schedule 7 to the Finance Act 1965. Under paragraph 18 where a close company transfers an asset at an undervalue, the difference is apportioned among the shareholders. Paragraph 5 of Schedule 13 (which is retrospective) exempts transfers within a group. The FINANCIAL SECRETARY said:

‘The aim of the amendment is to avoid penalizing bona fide business arrangements, but we already hear of schemes being devised which, if put into effect, would take advantage of this relieving provision, or other provisions enacted for the convenience of groups of companies, in order to create an artificial loss.

‘I wanted to make it clear that this would be blatant avoidance, and I take the opportunity to give a warning that if these provisions are abused my right hon. friend the CHANCELLOR will not hesitate to introduce appropriate legislation, if need be with retrospective effect, to deal with it. We have not thought it right in respect of these arrangements to alter our intention to proceed with this paragraph as it stands in the Schedule. We do so coupled with that warning.’

On clause 31 and Schedule 14 which provide the dividing lines between capital gains tax and betterment levy, and are immensely complicated, some Government explanations were given. One thing has puzzled many laymen, namely the fact that while there is specific provision for a deduction for betterment levy in relation to estate duty and capital gains tax, there is no such provision for the computation of the profits of a dealer in land, or for the computation of profit for the purposes of short-term gains where land is sold.

The explanation is, of course, simple: betterment levy is allowable as a deduction to a land-dealer as a business expense under the ordinary rules of computation as amplified by section 137 of the Income Tax Act 1952. Short-term gains for the purposes of Case VII have to be computed on the footing that the purchase and sale of the land was an adventure in the nature of trade and of course the ordinary Case I rules apply to that as well.

There was a drafting error in paragraph 14 of Schedule 14 and a new paragraph was introduced at the behest of the Government. In the words of the Government spokesman, when capital gains on disposals of land containing development value become chargeable under the provisions of Schedule 14 by reference to changes in the current use value, the amount of the estate duty allowable under section 42 (3) of the Finance Act 1966, should be cut down to the part of the estate duty which is referable to the increase in the current use value between the date of the gift and the date of the death. This purpose was not achieved by the original paragraph 14 of Schedule 14.

For the introduction of a brand new clause about regional employment premiums the CHANCELLOR himself intervened in the debate. The clause which amends the Selective Employments Payments Act 1966 was described by its sponsor as ‘bold and dramatic’.

The new clause provides for the payment to manufacturers in development areas of special regional employment premiums, in order to encourage employment in those areas. For an adult male worker the premium is 30s a week, with smaller sums for other workers, and these premiums can be further increased by Treasury Order. The premiums are expected to cost £100 million in a full year but of course a great deal of this, about one-half, will come back to the Exchequer in the form of corporation tax, income tax, indirect taxes and social service payments.

Municipal Treasurers' New President

MR J. B. WOODHAM, B.SC.(ECON.), F.I.M.T.A., Borough Treasurer of Middlesbrough, was installed as President of The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants for 1967-68 at last week's annual conference of the Institute reported on other pages of this issue.

Fifty-four years of age, Mr Woodham commenced his career in local government at Reading in 1928. He subsequently served in the treasurer's office at Wolverhampton and Newcastle upon Tyne. In 1946 he was appointed Deputy City

Treasurer of Coventry and has held his present post since 1956.

Mr Woodham was admitted to membership of the Institute in 1935 sharing first place in the Final examination and winning the Collins Gold Medal and Margaret Johnson Prize.

Elected to the Council of the Institute in 1959, Mr Woodham has served on the Accounts and Rating, and Research and Publications Committees. He is a member of the Research, Finance, General Purposes and Policy Committees, chairman of the Examinations and Membership Committee, and of the newly-formed Management Techniques Committee. He is also joint chairman of the Local Public Authorities' Computer Panel, and for several years has been adviser to the Association of Municipal Corporations; he is chairman of that Association's Management Techniques Committee.

Mr Woodham describes his leisure activities as trying to photograph the passing scene and to catch trout, but finds the passing scene more co-operative.

The Institute's new Vice-President is Mr H. R. Page, M.A.(ADMIN.), F.I.M.T.A., City Treasurer of Manchester.

Investment Grants Speed-up

ONE of the weaknesses of the old capital allowances in respect of investment by industry was the delay in receiving the equivalent cash benefit. The introduction of the investment grants did not at first sight seem to offer - at least in practice - any marked improvement in this respect but according to Mr Douglas Jay, President of the Board of Trade, the pace at which claims have been coming in has more than doubled and already over £26 million of grants have been paid since April 1st.

By July 1st, five Investment Grants Offices will be ready to receive claims for the whole of the second half of 1966. This represents a period of six months, instead of the previous three months, and it is intended that payments for that period shall begin to be made on October 1st. Mr Jay anticipates that this will increase the cash flow to industry and he further hopes that the fact that firms will be able to claim for two quarters on a single form will save them trouble. They will then, in effect, be able to complete their application for the whole of their 1966 investment outlays.

The result of this accelerated payment is that the average delay between investment outlay and payment of the grant will now be reduced to twelve months, compared with eighteen months under the old investment allowance system. This acceleration is expected to entail additional expenditure in the current year and the necessary supplementary provision is being sought. In other words, a simple improvement in administration can result in adding its quota to reflationary pressures.

Exports Credit Losses

THE financial year 1966-67 was not a happy one for the Exports Credits Guarantee Department. For the first time in thirteen years the Department incurred a deficit on its commercial account. Despite the fact that premium income was £8.9 million, claims payments totalled £22 million and thus, after inclusion of interest on accumulated balances and recoveries on claims made in earlier years, the commercial account was left with £6 million in deficit.

The major factor contributing to this disappointing result was due to the E.C.G.D. bearing most of the weight of heavy delays in payments which would otherwise have fallen on British exporters. Of the £22 million of total claims, the Department's Secretary, Sir Anthony Percival, noted that only £4.9 million represented losses due to failures. Of that sum he anticipates it will be possible to recover about one-third. The balance of the losses was due, in the main, to exchange difficulties of the purchasing country and, even here, past experience suggests that a part of such losses are ultimately recovered.

The largest single payout of the year, amounting to £7.4 million, resulted from the economic and political difficulties in Ghana, while a further £5 million claim arose from Egypt's lack of sterling. According to Sir Anthony, arrangements have since been made with the countries concerned for these debts to be cleared over a long period of time. Similar arrangements are being sought in respect of the £2.2 million of losses in Indonesia.

Sir Anthony was at pains to stress that the heavy payments during the past year did not reflect any significant deterioration in the general level of risks borne. Even so he is of the opinion that claims payments during the next year or two will continue at a fairly high level, although these will in part be offset by the inflow of recoveries. In the circumstances, he concluded, it is not possible to reduce premiums any further after the 23 per cent reduction made during the past two years.

Re-opening Tax Cases in Ireland

A WELCOME acknowledgement of the expertise of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland was made by the Minister for Finance in the Dail recently. In a discussion on June 7th on the controversial question of the power of the Revenue Commissioners to go far back into past years to re-open tax assessments, the Minister suggested that it might be a solution if he undertook to discuss the matter with the Institute prior to the report stage of the Finance Bill. The Opposition accepted the suggestion and thereupon withdrew the amendment that they had put down.

The occasion was the debate on the money resolution

Board of Trade Statement on Treatment of Replacement Parts

THE Board of Trade has given further information to amplify what is said in paragraph 118 of the booklet Investment Grants on the question of the treatment of replacement parts of machinery or plant for investment grant purposes. The following guidance is intended to help industry and the accountancy profession by explaining the basis on which replacement parts will be treated in future.

2. The Board of Trade intends to follow as closely as possible the existing Inland Revenue practice on replacement parts. The accountancy profession will already be familiar with its basic principles. Expenditure on items which merely replace existing identical parts in a machine and do no more than maintain that machine in working order will not attract grants. Such expenditure would normally be regarded as revenue expenditure in firms' accounts and for tax purposes.

3. The Board of Trade will, however, be prepared to pay grant on replacements of machinery or plant which is eligible for grants where such expenditure is of a capital nature and is treated as such by the claimant in relation to his tax returns. In distinguishing between capital and revenue expenditure the Board will follow standard Inland Revenue practice. This means that expenditure on a replacement item can qualify for grants if it satisfies all the following tests:

- (1) the item costs £25 or over excluding any installation or fitting costs;

- (2) it has an expected normal working life of at least two years;
- (3) it is a complete entity in itself and not merely a subsidiary part of a larger item of plant and machinery;
- (4) the expenditure is treated as capital by the firm for tax purposes.

4. The Board stresses that in order to attract grant, expenditure must be on a new physical item and that costs of maintenance (such as repainting, re-boring, etc.) do not qualify. Where the replacement of part of a machine incorporates some improvement or extension of the machine's capacity, the Board will allow for grant that part of the cost of the replacement which is attributable to the element of improvement. This again follows the practice of the Inland Revenue in relation to capital allowances.

5. The Board will continue to apply strictly the £25 minimum value limit for each item. Except in the case of an initial set or kit of small parts costing less than £25 each which is bought with a new machine, no grant will be paid on expenditure of less than £25 (excluding installation costs) on any single item.

6. Adoption of the policy described in this note means that the Board will not treat expenditure incurred by firms in reconditioning their existing machinery on a special basis; such expenditure will be governed in future by the principles set out above.

relating to the Finance Bill, and the amendment sought to prevent the authorities from going back indefinitely for tax assessment, a time limit of ten years being proposed except where fraud was involved; there was to be no time limit in cases of fraud. The position at present is that the Commissioners can go back certainly for forty-five years and maybe longer, and taxpayers have extreme difficulty in producing records to contest such cases.

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland and the Incorporated Law Society have represented to the Minister this year that a review of the position is needed. While a taxpayer can only go back six years in a claim for repayment of tax, the Revenue Commissioners are entitled to go back at least to 1922.

The recent report of the Commission on Taxation recommended the ten-year restriction.

The Minister contended that the Revenue Commissioners did not, in practice, go back beyond six years except in cases of fraud or wilful neglect. The present situation, he submitted, was reasonable and flexible, and operated fairly well. It would be an unreasonable restraint on the Commissioners if they were statutorily prevented from re-opening back cases unless they could prove fraud.

Then the implied offer of the Minister (himself a chartered accountant) to accept the view of the Institute as a yardstick against which to measure his final decision, was apparently received as an ideal solution.

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

OUR maintenance engineer is a man of combined charm and intelligence – two qualities which are useful assets in a profession involving status-conscious subordinates and an ancient building block but he has his blind spots. One of these, as I have noted in the past, concerns accountants.

He stood outside his room, glowering with annoyance, as I came down the passage. 'These figures your costing people have given me for the garage extension are all wrong,' he flung at me. 'They've loaded every so-and-so charge that they could find – everything bar the kitchen sink – on my final budget. A fine mess they've made of my report to the board.'

I gave him a stony stare in reply to his undignified outburst. Comments reflecting adversely on the veracity of the accounts department and its staff to my mind, are in bad taste and deserve total reprisal. 'Hysteria,' I admonished him curtly. 'Better calm down, or shall I send you a doctor?'

It is, of course, essential to understand from the beginning that when an engineer denounces a cost allocation as wrong, it is not necessarily inaccurate in his untutored estimation. He merely means that it doesn't suit his own preconceived idea of the position and is therefore unacceptable. In this regard he differs from the typical salesman. When the latter embroiderer of enticing imageries calls a figure wrong, his contention is that his objectives are aimed at higher things than mere statistics – things like Common Market exports or his next commission cheque – thus the intrusion of fundamental facts, if adverse, is automatically unjustified. So I received with tolerance the engineer's next harangue, and asked for reason rather than rodomontade.

'Your people have allocated me nearly £4,000 for what they call overheads to start with, and they have given the deputy-chairman a copy of that so-and-so balderdash,' snarled my colleague, so to save him from apoplexy I outlined some basic logic for him. He listened unbelievably; as Mr P. G. Wodehouse once remarked, he was in the mood when men say 'Pshaw'.

I reminded him that he'd had two typists on loan from the typing pool and an assistant cost accountant, just to start the ball rolling. His budget had naturally been charged with their salaries, plus what we called payroll burden – a phrase including inter alia pension contribution, S.E.T. and National Insurance. That was nonsense to his way of thinking, he stormed; he maintained that staff shouldn't be costed to him unless they were seconded for a minimum of a year, and never before had he heard of 'burden'.

I reminded him that we hadn't debited typewriter depreciation, stationery, telephones, heat and light, or room rental; he didn't however express thanks for our magnanimity, but nearly foamed at the mouth and used a couple of unrepeatable epithets.

We then had some argument about a loading of his own staff's time to the job, as I had forgotten that we hadn't in fact done so. This misunderstanding being settled, he disputed the percentage of depreciation on the new lorry allocated for the job. This was in fact a point of very delicate judgement, since the transport manager had already fought hard to get the item out of his own budget. We ultimately agreed to take the dispute to a higher level for final arbitration.

The last item in the overheads represented interest on the capital cost of the garage – admittedly a debatable element. At this stage the engineer declared that the farce had gone too far. He would report our disagreement direct to the deputy-chairman and he could promise that an official decision supporting his views would be the immediate answer. So an interesting session lies ahead.

Centenary of the Rule in Allhusen v. Whittell

by C. A. WHITTINGTON-SMITH, LL.M., F.C.A.

IT is exactly a hundred years since the Court of Equity decided the case of Allhusen v. Whittell ((1867) 4 Eq. 195), and gave expression to the famous rule which has at times caused keen controversy and is still, despite many enemies, by no means the dead letter some of them would wish it to be.

If little has been seen of it in the English Courts in recent years that no doubt is because many of the difficult questions to which the rule gave rise in earlier years were resolutely faced up to by the Court in some notable judgments. But its influence has spread beyond the seas and in 1959 we find a Canadian judge saying that '... the case is clearly of authority in our law relating to the administration of estates' (Wells, J., in Re Coulson (19 D.L.R. (2d) 206, 1959 O.R. 156 at page 228)), though, in the case in question, he held that the rule in Allhusen v. Whittell did not apply.

In 1965 an interesting and by no means unimportant judgment with regard to the applicability of the rule was given by the Supreme Court of Canada in a case which allowed an appeal from a decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal, which had in turn dismissed an appeal from a judgment of the Court of first instance in British Columbia (Lotzkar, Lotzkar v. Southin et al. ([1965] 54 D.L.R. (2d) 47)).

The facts and the decision

In the celebrated case from which the rule takes its name – although, as we shall see, there was less than is sometimes supposed that was really new about the rule – a testator named Field had by his will directed that with a single exception all legacies should be payable at the end of one year from death. His residuary legatee, whose name was Whittell, died six months after Field, bequeathing the residue of his estate to a tenant for life. Whittell's estate consisted almost entirely of the bequest from Field. The Court was asked how the rights of the life-tenant and remainderman should be adjusted.

It was held that the tenant for life was entitled to the income of such portion of residue as was in a proper state of investment, in specie, and to the intermediate income of the fund set aside to meet contingent legacies. But it was held also that though the executors were at liberty to have recourse to any funds they pleased in order to pay the debts and legacies, they would:

'be treated by the Court, in adjusting the accounts between the tenant for life and the remainderman, as having paid the debts and legacies not out of capital only, nor out of income only, but with such portion of the capital as, together with the income of that portion for one year, was sufficient for the purpose.'

To give a simple illustration of this, suppose the capital of an estate at the date of death was £10,000 out of which £5,000 was paid for debts and legacies, and that the first year's net income was £500. The proportion of income attributable to the debts and legacies is  $\frac{£5,000}{£10,500}$  or £238 1s 11d. This leaves £4,761 18s 1d to be charged to capital. It is worth noticing that this amount invested for one year at 5 per cent would produce £5,000. A ruling that the income should be taken into account after the deduction of income tax at the standard rate was given by the Court in Re Oldham, Oldham v. Myles ([1927] W.N. 113; 71 S.J. 149).

Anomalies

The rule in Allhusen v. Whittell '... was adopted as a convenient and fair rule for ascertaining the share of the estate which really represented residue.' (North, J., in Re Harrison ((1889), 43 Ch.D. 55).) But it did not always work well and what caused frequent concern was the apparent requirement to assume that debts and legacies must absorb the portion of capital which sufficed to meet them when there was added to it the income of that piece of capital for exactly one year.

Later, in Re McEuen, McEuen v. Phelps, ([1913] 2 Ch. 716), Sargant, J. spoke at some length of the anomalies that could arise from this requirement:

'Assume that a testator leaves gross estate of £102,000 with estate duty, debts, etc., amounting to £52,000 and that the executors do (however impossible this may in fact be) clear off all these liabilities the day after the death, with the result that the residue is at once ascertained at £50,000 and earns during the year at 4 per cent a sum of £2,000. According to the defendant's theory the £52,000 must be deemed to be discharged out of £50,000 capital and £2,000 income. The result will be that the tenant for life has to give up the whole income earned by the remaining £50,000 during the first year and gets no income at all during that year and further that the capital available for the remaindermen is increased to £52,000. The result is startling but not so startling as would be the case if the debts immediately discharged had been say £60,000 or £70,000 for then on the same principle the income of the tenant for life during the first year would be a minus quantity . . . nothing would be gained by multiplying instances.'

The testator in Re McEuen had died on February 6th, 1911. On the following April 1st, £47,450 was paid for estate duty and within five months of his death £30,000 was paid out in legacies.

Nature of equity

What so often tended to be overlooked was that the rule in Allhusen v. Whittell was a particular application of a general, underlying principle. In this respect it serves to illustrate an important distinction to be made in interpreting precedent as between decisions of the Court of Equity and decisions of the Courts of Common Law. The former provide illustrations of a priori principles based upon the concept of a court of conscience whose procedure is in personam. But at common law the principles, it has been truly said, are in the cases or they are nowhere.

That great lawyer, Blackstone, who was the first holder of the Vinerian Chair of English Law at Oxford and author of the famous Commentaries on the Laws of England, observed that equity depends essentially upon the particular circumstances of each individual case and that established rules and fixed precepts of equity could not be laid down without destroying its very essence. Nearer to our own day another Vinerian professor, the late Sir William Holdsworth, has said that the root idea of equity is to enable hard cases to be avoided.

Rigidly applied, the rule in Allhusen v. Whittell could and did cause hard cases.

Purport of the rule

In the judgment in Re McEuen it was pointed out that the decision in Allhusen v. Whittell was founded on an earlier case, Holgate v. Jennings, ((1857) 24 Beav. 623), and did not in any way enlarge the principle of that case.

A testator had given £16,000 in legacies payable within six months after his death and left the residue of his estate in trust to pay the annual proceeds to his wife for life. After her death his residuary estate was to be divided between his nieces and nephews. He died possessed of a large amount of Consols on which his widow (who was also the executor) received a first half-yearly dividend and then sold sufficient to pay the legacies. It was held that she was not entitled, as tenant for life, to the dividend on the stock producing the £16,000 and that such dividend formed part of corpus.

Still earlier cases can be found in support of this decision. There is, for example, Amphlett v. Parke (1 Sim. 175; 4 Russ. 75), in which it was held that where residuary estate is given for life with remainders over to the children of the tenant for life, the latter:

' . . . should enjoy the income of that property the capital of which was to descend to her children, and nothing more . . . and the interest or dividend in question . . . is to be considered as capital, of which the tenant for life will take the income only.'

The interest or dividend in question was interest on lapsed legacies.

There is also Fletcher v. Stephenson (3 Hare 360), where it was said that:

'The tenant for life is entitled only to the true residue of the testator's estate. If the demands to which the estate . . . may possibly be found liable . . . were certain (though future) I am not prepared to say that the present value of all those liabilities must not be ascertained in order to show what the true residue of the testator's estate is, upon which the Court, in favour of a tenant for life, reduces future assets into their present possession at their present value. I cannot say that in favour of the remainderman, the Court ought not to reduce the future values of the estate into present values in order to ascertain the true residue . . . which the tenant for life and the remainderman are to enjoy in succession. And if that be so where the liabilities are certain, the Court must equally do so until the result is known. . . . It is only with the true residue that I can deal.'

What stands out in all these cases is an insistence that life-tenant and remainderman shall enjoy the true residue: ' . . . the broad equitable principle that where residue is limited to persons in succession, their successive enjoyment is to be an enjoyment of the same fund.' (Sargant, J., in Re McEuen.)

True residue

The concept of 'true residue' – a term used so far as the writer is aware for the first time in the judgment in Fletcher v. Stephenson – is essential to a proper understanding of the rule. But what is true residue?

If a testator leaves gross estate of £100,000 out of which debts, legacies, and estate duty amounting to £80,000 are paid at various times during the administration of his estate; giving a life interest in the residue and a gift in remainder, with the result that apportionments have to be made under the rule in Allhusen v. Whittell (in the absence of a clause in the will which is effective in excluding it), what is the true residue? Is it £20,000, or something that cannot be determined until the administration is complete when the £20,000 – assuming for the sake of illustration that in the meantime there have been no gains or losses in realizing assets – has been augmented by the sums apportioned to the estate income account and credited per contra to capital?

The latter is the right answer. Only when the administration is complete can the residue be ascertained. In the meantime, the estate income belongs to the executors and cannot for the time being be claimed by a beneficiary.

Liabilities

The liabilities chargeable against the gross estate, like residue, take time to determine. Assets may be difficult to realize, there may be problems of valuation – perhaps in relation to a business – and more than one corrective affidavit may have to be filed before the final liability for estate duty can be settled. In the meantime, assets required for the payment of liabilities may be earning income. But the tenant for life, to quote Lord Hatherley in Allhusen v. Whittell, ‘... ought not to have the income of what is wanted for the payment of debts because that never becomes residue in any way whatever.’

That is a most important point, and though in practice the rule in Allhusen v. Whittell is, in the words of Hamlet, more honoured in the breach than the observance, it is a point that ought not to be overlooked. Further emphasis of this is to be found in the judgment of Sargant, J., in Re McEuen: ‘... the intermediate income of what is eaten up by debts and legacies ... cannot itself be income of residue or payable as such to a tenant for life of residue.’

In the cases decided by the Courts in which the mode of applying the rule was in issue it has invariably been held that what is consumed by debts and legacies, if payment of them is deferred, is not their full amount but their discounted value at the date of death.

Romer, L.J., in Corbett v. C.I.R. ([1938] 1 K.B. 567), expressed the matter as follows:

‘For the purpose of adjusting the rights as against the tenant for life and the remainderman of the residuary estate, debts, legacies, estate duties ... and so forth, are to be deemed to have been paid out of such capital of the testator’s estate as will be sufficient for that purpose, when to that capital is added interest on that capital from the date of the testator’s death to the date of payment of the legacy or debt, or whatever it may have been, interest being calculated at the average rate of interest earned by the testator’s estate during the relevant period.’

An alternative

In Re Wills, Wills v. Hamilton ([1915] 1 Ch. 769), a method of applying the rule which had the support of Lord Plender, F.C.A. (then Sir William Plender) was advocated. This was to treat the gross estate as consisting of two funds: the deductible fund and the net residue fund. It was described by Sargant, J., as follows:

‘The ... question ... is whether in applying the rule the Court ought to form, for the purpose of calculation, what is called a deductible fund, namely, the fund necessary to pay the liabilities, and to deprive the tenant for life of income on that deductible fund ... or whether the Court ought to treat the tenant for life as deprived only of such sum as with the income on that sum will be sufficient to discharge the liabilities.’

The learned judge added that in his opinion the latter was the true principle, though he recognized that ‘... in many cases the calculation on the former principle would be a slightly easier one.’

Two years earlier, however, in Re McEuen, Sargant, J., had observed that if a particular asset be applied, with the intermediate interest on it, in the discharge of liabilities no adjustment need be made:

‘Or in cases where the average income of the estate is quite low, there would be no appreciable ground for complaint if the capital of the estate duty itself were charged against income instead of dividing the total sum paid between capital and income with reference to the exact rate of interest yielded by the estate as a whole, or by the particular asset used to pay the duty.’

That there are limits to the application of a more rough and ready method was, however, made clear in his judgment in Re Wills:

‘... though in the case of small estates ... it might very often be a good rough and ready rule to allow the interest and estate duty to be paid out of income and the capital out of capital; in strictness it seems to me that the amount paid for both capital and interest ought to be treated as the debt or liability to be discharged and to be apportioned between capital and income.’

A year later, in Re Waller, Margarison v. Waller ([1916] 1 Ch. 153), we find the same judge again emphasizing that:

‘although it might be the strict course to pay the duty and interest out of capital and then to make an apportionment, it would often be sufficiently accurate if the capital of the duty were paid out of capital and the interest out of interest.’

In Re Wills the payments and appropriations in respect of the various liabilities were not completed until the expiration of five years from the testator’s death. But one thing particularly significant about this case is that the will directed that the income from the estate, howsoever invested, should as from the date of death be treated as income and that no part thereof should be added to capital.

Attempts at exclusion

On the question of the construction of the will the Court held it did not exclude the rule in Allhusen v. Whittell as interpreted in Re McEuen.

It is often said that a well-drawn will expressly excludes equitable apportionments. The Court, however, may be less willing to exclude them than is sometimes believed. In Re Hey’s Settlement Trusts ([1945] Ch. 294), for example, the testator had stated in his will ‘... I negative the rules known as the rules in Howe v. Earl of Dartmouth<sup>1</sup> and Allhusen v. Whittell in all their branches.’ Nevertheless, the Court held that sums received before the trustees exercised the power conferred upon them by the will to postpone the sale of assets should be apportioned between capital and income under the rule in Re Earl of Chesterfield’s

Again, in Re Ullswater, deceased, ([1951] 2 All E.R. 989; [1952] Ch. 105), where the will provided that:

'... the income of so much of the said premises as shall for the time being remain unsold shall as well during the first year after my death as afterwards be applied as if the same were income arising from investments hereinafter directed to be made of the proceeds of sale thereof.'

the Court held that the clause in question negatived the application of the rule in Howe v. Dartmouth but not that in Allhusen v. Whittell.

In practice, trustees tend, wherever possible, to ignore the rule, but unless the will expressly excludes the rule they ought always to ask themselves where the residue or bulk of the property is left en masse and given to persons in succession, whether by ignoring it they will in fact give proper effect to any apparent or presumable intention of the testator that tenant for life and remainderman shall enjoy the same thing in succession.

This is a question to which an answer should always be obtained. It is true that a famous Chancery judge at the turn of the century said the main duty of a trustee was to commit judicious breaches of trust, but under what circumstances failure to preserve strict impartiality between life-tenant and remainderman could be deemed judicious is a moot point.

The Court ensures a careful balancing of their respective interests by enforcing the doctrines that equality is equity and that equity regards as done that which ought to be done. The purpose of equitable apportionment, as under the rule in Allhusen v. Whittell, is to give effect to those doctrines in relation to trust funds.

The rules of equitable apportionment have few friends; partly, perhaps, because those whom they benefit, or should benefit, are for the most part unaware of their existence. But another reason is the difficulties that can – and do – frequently arise in applying them. To solicitors they present problems of accounting not always congenial and to accountants, legal refinements that are sometimes confusing.

Allhusen v. Whittell, a century afterwards, has something of a bad reputation, not altogether without reason, though in Re McEuen and in Re Wills, Sargant, J., did a great work in clarifying the issue. In the former case for example, he stressed the point that 'extremely elaborate and minute calculations need not be gone through in every case', and that 'some methods may be more appropriate in some cases and other methods in other cases. The actual accountancy will not be difficult so long as the true object is borne in mind. ... Allhusen v. Whittell did not, in my judgment, prescribe an exact form of words for use in all cases.'

Example

To pursue further the second of our illustrations, let us assume that the testator died on December 31st, 1963, and that out of the gross estate of £100,000 the payments for debts, legacies, and estate duty were made as follows:

1964				£
March 31st	..	..	..	40,000
September 30th	..	..	..	20,000
1965				£
June 30th	..	..	..	5,000
December 31st	..	..	..	15,000
				£80,000

If the average yield of the estate was 6 per cent in the year ended December 31st, 1964, and 5 per cent in the year ended December 31st, 1965, apportionments under the rule in accordance with its interpretation in Re McEuen and Re Wills, would be as follows:

1964		Income		Capital
March 31st:		£	£	£
$\frac{3/12 \text{ths} \times 6}{100 + (3/12 \text{ths} \times 6)}$	$\times £40,000$	..	591
$\frac{100}{100 + (3/12 \text{ths} \times 6)}$	$\times £40,000$	..		39,409
September 30th:
$\frac{9/12 \text{ths} \times 6}{100 + (9/12 \text{ths} \times 6)}$	$\times £20,000$	..	862
$\frac{100}{100 + (9/12 \text{ths} \times 6)}$	$\times £20,000$	..		19,138
1965		Income		Capital
June 30th:		£	£	£
$\frac{6 + 6/12 \text{ths} \times 5}{100 + (6 + 6/12 \text{ths} \times 5)}$	$\times £5,000$	..	392
$\frac{100}{100 + (6 + 6/12 \text{ths} \times 5)}$	$\times £5,000$	..		4,608
December 31st:
$\frac{6 + 5}{100 + (6 + 5)}$	$\times £15,000$	..	1,486
$\frac{100}{100 + (6 + 5)}$	$\times £15,000$	..		13,514
		£3,331		£76,669

£3,331 should accordingly be charged against the estate income and credited to capital.

It will be noticed that simple and not compound interest is taken into account in the apportionments for the second year. This has been done in accordance with the decisions of the Court in cases that are really particular applications of the rule, namely, In Re Perkins, Brown v. Perkins ((1907) 2 Ch. 596), and In Re Poyser, Landon v. Poyser ((1910) 2 Ch. 444). They are, of course, well-known decisions in respect of annuities which a testator has contracted or covenanted to pay during his lifetime and which at the time of his death are a continuing liability of his estate and thus, incidentally, allowable for the purpose of estate duty.

Since the average rate of interest earned in the first year was 6 per cent and in the second year 5 per cent, £100 invested at the date of death would have accumulated to £106 by the end of the first year with, at simple interest for the first six months of the second year, a further  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, thereby giving a denominator of  $108\frac{1}{2}$  for the payment on June 1st, 1965, and, with interest at 5 per cent for the whole of the second year, a denominator of 111 for the payment on December 31st, 1965.

If the liabilities were treated as a deductible fund the charge to income would be calculable more simply as follows:

Year ended December 31st, 1964	£	£
6 per cent on £40,000 for three months	600
6 per cent on £20,000 for nine months ..	900
6 per cent on £5,000 for twelve months	300
6 per cent on £15,000 for twelve months	900
		2,700
Year ended December 31st, 1965
5 per cent on £5,000 for six months ..	125
5 per cent on £15,000 for twelve months	750
		£3,575

The difference of £244 between the results of the two methods is comparatively small and in view of the observations of Sargant, J., in Re McEuen and Re Wills (despite his unwillingness to subtract capital from the gross estate in the ascertainment of residue until there was an actual severance of such capital), there seems to be no real objection to its adoption in the majority of cases where there is no disparity between the rate of income earned by the proportion of the estate to be treated as a deductible fund in comparison with the estate as a whole.

The capital of the estate is in either case augmented by the charges against income with the result that, other things being equal, the net residue of the estate as determined at the time of the final severance in respect of liabilities would be £23,331 under the first method and £23,575 under the second.

Conclusion

A short article in which an attempt has been made to celebrate the centenary of the rule in a necessarily historical though, it is hoped, in what is also a practical context, might conclude with an extract from the judgment of Sir Wilfred Greene, M.R., in Re Darby, Russell v. McGregor ([1939] Ch. 905 at pages 916 and 917):

"The rule in Allhusen v. Whittell, like so many other rules which the Court of Equity has adopted, is for the purpose of giving effect to the equitable arrangements which the testator may be presumed to have intended in making the disposition which he did make. It can be displaced by any language of the will which sufficiently shows an intention to displace it and, in my opinion, it also ceases to be applicable where the nature of the property concerned or the circumstances affecting it are such as to make it impossible to apply the rule as it ought to be applied."

The moral to be drawn then, at its centenary, is that the rule, as we said at the beginning, is by no means dead. There are still circumstances in which it should be applied and even now, as Professor Keeton says in his Law of Trusts (eighth edition, page 241), it is 'an important rule'.

Taxation Case

A full report of the case summarized in this column will be published, with Notes on the Judgment, in the 'Annotated Tax Cases'

Mason v. Innes

In the Court of Appeal – May 2nd, 1967

Income tax – Profession – Author wrote a book – Gave copyright to another person – Assessment on cash basis – Whether value of copyright a taxable receipt of author – Income Tax Act 1952, section 471, Schedule D, Case II.

The taxpayer wrote a book, The Doomed Oasis, and on April 4th, 1960, he was engaged in the final revision of the manuscript; but the book had not been submitted to any publisher. On that day, the taxpayer assigned the copyright in the book to his father as a gift, and the taxpayer received no consideration for the assignment, though the continuance of his success as a professional author depended in some degree on his publishing a book every three or four years. The taxpayer was assessable on the cash basis. He had travelled a good deal to obtain material for the book, and the expenses thereof had been allowed among his other expenses as an author. At the date of the assignment the value of the copyright in The Doomed Oasis was £15,425.

The Inland Revenue made an additional assessment on the taxpayer under Case II of Schedule D for 1960–61 in the estimated amount of £17,500, but it was conceded that, if the assessment stood, the amount of it would have to be reduced to £15,425. It was contended for the taxpayer that the £15,425 was not a taxable receipt of his whether on the principle of Sharkey v. Wernher or otherwise. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the taxpayer.

Held (affirming the judgment of Mr Justice Goff): the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

Seventeenth National Taxation Conference

Harrogate, October 20th – 23rd

THE seventeenth National Taxation Conference, organized by our contemporary Taxation, is to be held in Harrogate from October 20th to 23rd.

The conference, which will be under the chairmanship of Mr Percy F. Hughes, Editor of Taxation, is open to members of the accountancy and legal professions, and to accountants in industry and commerce – to all, in fact, interested in the various phases of the law and practice of taxation.

The provisional programme outlined below gives details of the business sessions and various social events arranged; there will also be an attractive programme for the lady visitors.

Provisional Programme

All business sessions will be held at the Royal Hall.

Friday afternoon, October 20th:

SHORT INAUGURAL ADDRESS by the Conference Chairman, Mr Percy F. Hughes.

A CIVIC WELCOME by His Worship the Mayor of Harrogate.

It is hoped that lady guests will attend these events.

ADDRESS by: Mr Edward F. George, LL.B., Solicitor of the Supreme Court, on 'The new betterment levy – its effect on corporation tax and capital gains tax'.

Chairman: Mr W. Sholto Olleson, T.D., F.A.C.C.A.

Friday evening:

A RECEPTION AND COCKTAIL PARTY will be given by the Editor of Taxation in the ballroom of the Hotel Majestic, to which all members and their ladies will be invited.

Saturday morning, October 21st:

MOCK INTERVIEW: Discussion between an 'Inspector of Taxes' and an accountant leading to agreement of liabilities on capital gains. (The last half-hour of this session will be devoted to audience participation.) Taking the part of the Inspector of Taxes: Mr Percy F. Hughes, Editor of Taxation. Taking the part of the accountant: Mr K. R. Tingley, F.A.C.C.A.

FOR THE LADIES: A coach tour through the beautiful Yorkshire countryside to visit Newby Hall which is one of the most famous Adam Houses of England and is also noted for its superb Gobelin tapestries, statue galleries and furniture.

Morning coffee will be served and if time permits, a short visit will be made to Ripon Cathedral on the return journey.

Saturday afternoon:

ADDRESS by: Mr James S. Heaton, F.C.A., on 'Corporation tax – close companies and shortfall'.

Chairman: Mr Peter H. Dobson, J.P., F.C.A.

ADDRESS by: Mr Alun G. Davies, Executive Director, Rio-Tinto Zinc Corporation, on 'Company taxation – its effect on industry and management incentive'.

Chairman: Mr E. Birnie Reid, O.B.E., T.D., D.L.

Saturday evening:

CIVIC RECEPTION AND DANCE to be given by His Worship the Mayor of Harrogate in The Royal Hall. Refreshments. Evening dress or dinner jacket. Invitations will be extended to all those attending the conference.

Sunday morning, October 22nd:

MORNING SERVICE for conference members and their ladies at St Peter's Parish Church, conducted by the Vicar, The Rev. A. N. B. Sugden.

GOLF COMPETITION: An eighteen-hole Stableford Golf Competition for the Taxation Challenge Cup will be held on the Oakdale Golf Club's attractive course which is conveniently situated only ten minutes' walk from the centre of Harrogate.

Monday morning, October 23rd:

ADDRESS by: Mr Eric C. Meade, F.C.A., on 'Recent legislation – Finance Act 1967'.

Chairman: Mr W. L. Spalding, B.SC.(ECON.), C.A., F.C.W.A., F.C.I.S.

ADDRESS by: Mr Kenneth Exley, F.C.A., on 'Capital gains tax – valuation of assets'.

Chairman: Mr Arthur S. Boyd, F.C.A.

FOR THE LADIES: An interesting special event is being arranged, details of which will be notified at a later date.

In General

Conference Headquarters and Information Office will be at the Hotel Majestic. Special facilities will be granted to all members of the conference by the Corporation of Harrogate.

Those who desire to attend the conference are invited to make a nominal contribution of three guineas each for participating members and two guineas each for wives and guests of members towards the conference expenses. No further charge whatsoever will be made and all social functions will be free. Those who attend will only be required to pay for their hotel accommodation.

Registration

Early application for registration for the conference is important. It is hoped to arrange for concessional fares for conference members and those interested should indicate that they require details.

Registration forms and lists of hotels will be forwarded upon request to The Conference Secretary, 98 Park Street, London W1.

Kingston Cotton Mill case Re-appraised

by J. D. B. OLIVER, B.A.(Lond.), B.A.(Cantab.), A.C.A.

THE recent decision of Pennycuik, J., in the case of Re Thomas Gerrard & Son Ltd<sup>1</sup> is not likely to cause much surprise to accountants and auditors in so far as the ratio decidendi is concerned; but it is likely to be of some interest in view of the observations of the learned judge on the decision in Re Kingston Cotton Mill (No. 2) ([1896] 2 Ch. 279).

The relevant facts were quite simple. Over a number of years the managing director of a cotton-spinning company had falsified the stock, purchases and sales figures appearing in the accounts in the following ways:

- (1) by including non-existent stock;
- (2) post-dating purchase invoices at the year-end;
- (3) ante-dating sales invoices at the year-end.

In each year the auditors gave an unqualified report on the accounts.

At some stage during the period the auditors, who had not suspected anything was wrong with the stock figures or 'cut-off', came across certain year-end purchase invoices on which the dates had been altered. They took the matter up with the secretary and later with the managing director, but were satisfied with the replies they received.

The company continued to trade and to show apparent profits when it suddenly became clear that it was in fact hopelessly insolvent. The company went into liquidation, the manipulation of the stock, etc., figures was discovered, and the liquidator brought proceedings against the auditors for breach of duty.

Pennycuik, J., held that the auditors were liable for breach of duty. Having discovered the altered dates on the purchase invoices they were put on inquiry and should have pursued the matter exhaustively and then reported their findings to the board. Instead, they had accepted the explanations of the managing director. Furthermore, the company had an inadequate and antiquated system of internal check and it was only at a very late stage that the auditors had drawn attention to this and had attempted to do anything about it. They had therefore failed in their duty.

What, however, would have been the position of the auditors had the manipulations only related to stock (under method (1) above) – in other words, a Kingston Cotton Mill type of situation? Because this question is of considerable importance to auditors, one is glad that Pennycuik, J., took the opportunity to discuss this point, although his observations should be regarded as obiter since the ratio decidendi was clearly based on the two findings set out in the preceding paragraph.

However, although these dicta were obiter they do give important guidance on the modern approach of the Courts to the Kingston Cotton Mill case. Moreover, since it is only rarely that cases on auditors' duties reach the Courts it may well be some time before the question is litigated again and further light is thrown on the current legal position of the auditor in relation to stock-in-trade. It is therefore worth while examining the dicta in some detail and drawing some preliminary conclusions.<sup>2</sup>

First, from the preliminary reports published, the learned judge is stated to have said that the Kingston Cotton Mill case laid down that it was no part of the auditor's duty to take stock. He did not, however, suggest that this either did or did not mean that the auditor was under no duty physically to verify the stock by, say, a series of test-checks. This may be significant because it can be argued that Lopes, L.J., in his famous dictum simply laid down that the auditor was not a stock-taker. That is, that just as it was no part of the auditor's duty to prepare accounts so it was no part of his duty to take stock. But though it is not his duty to prepare accounts it is nevertheless his duty to verify the items appearing therein, and so also though he does not take stock he must verify it, and this verification should include a physical test-check.

According to the reports, Pennycuik, J., then went on to say that the Kingston Cotton Mill decision had also laid down that the auditor was not bound to be suspicious where there was no reason for suspicion. This, of course, is simply a corollary to the auditor's duty to exercise reasonable skill and care; for if, having exercised reasonable skill and care, he found no cause for suspicion and yet was still required to be suspicious, then the duty laid on him would be higher than that of exercising reasonable skill and care, which we know it is not.

However, taking the Kingston Cotton Mill decision as it stood, that case appeared to be conclusively in favour of the auditors, said the learned judge, if one took the falsifying of stock in isolation. But, he went on, while the quality of the auditor's duty had not changed – i.e. it was still a duty to exercise reasonable skill and care – standards were now more stringent. In other words, what is reasonable skill and care is determined by, inter alia, contemporary auditing standards; and because these are now higher, what would have passed as reasonable skill seventy years ago may not do so today. This view, incidentally, is very similar to that expressed in Section U 2 of the Members' Handbook of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

The judge concluded, therefore, that it must be open to the Court to make a finding that in all the circumstances the auditors had been in breach of their duty in relation to stock. However, since he was able to base his decision on the auditor's negligence in failing to discover the manipulations under method (2), he himself preferred not to make any finding on the point.

It seems likely, therefore, that in any future case it will not be possible to place much reliance on the Kingston Cotton Mill case in relation to the actual tests which the auditor should carry out to verify stock. Rather, the Courts will have regard to current auditing standards and to what the reasonable and careful auditor would have done.

Many auditors already include a physical test-check of stock in their audit programme, but for various reasons others do not carry out any physical verification of stock. Faced with this 'double standard' the Courts might well have to decide whether the reasonable auditor is a 'progressive'; or alternatively they might choose to hold that notwithstanding certain current practice (which after all is only prima facie evidence of what the reasonable auditor would do) the reasonable auditor would be expected to carry out some physical test-check on stock. This is a question which will have to be resolved by the Courts at some time in the future. What is clear for the present is that if the dicta in Re Thomas Gerrard are anything to go by, then in reaching a decision today the Courts will not allow the Kingston Cotton Mill case to stand in their way.

Joint Memorandum to the Chancellor of the Exchequer

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland and The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants have submitted to the Chancellor of the Exchequer the following joint memorandum of comments which arise on a preliminary consideration of the Finance (No. 2) Bill 1967.

INTRODUCTORY

SUBMISSIONS have been made previously that explanatory notes should be published with Finance Bills; the accountancy bodies regret that the opportunity to issue explanatory notes has not been taken with the 1967 Bill.

PART II – INCOME TAX

Clause 15 – Increase of surtax rates for 1965–66

2. The accountancy bodies deplore the retrospective effect of this clause and in particular the effect on the estates of deceased persons where death occurred on or after July 21st, 1966, and before April 6th, 1967.

3. Clarification is sought of the meaning of the words 'and without more' at the end of clause 15 (2).

4. Assurance is sought that where under clause 15 (8) additional surtax for the year 1965–66 has become payable by any person in regard to his interest in a company which is dissolved before September 30th, 1967, the additional tax paid will be allowed as a deduction for capital gains tax purposes, where appropriate.

Clause 17 – Relief where copyright sold after ten years or more

5. Clause 17 (1) requires that not less than ten years shall have elapsed since first publication of the work, for the relief to be available. It is difficult to visualize compelling reasons for a period as long as ten years and the accountancy bodies would be interested to learn why this period was chosen.

6. Clause 17 (4) provides that any post-death instalment for the assignment of the copyright or interest shall be treated as becoming receivable on the date of the last deemed instalment before death and clause 17 (5) gives the personal representatives a right of election so that the income tax and surtax payable as a result of the operation of sub-clause (4) shall not exceed the amount which would have been payable if the copyright or interest had been assigned for a period beginning with the receivable date of the first instalment and ending with the date of death. It is submitted that sub-clause (5) should expressly provide for the deduction of amounts of tax assessed before the date of death.

7. This clause gives little or no relief in the case of a taxpayer who dies within a short period of making the assignment. Consideration should be given to the introduction of suitable provisions to provide relief in these circumstances.

PART III – CORPORATION TAX AND INCOME TAX

Clause 19 and Schedule 10 – Reliefs for groups of companies

8. Clause 19 provides a form of group relief and whilst the accountancy bodies welcome it in principle, they wish to draw attention to the following apparent anomalies and omissions in the proposals:

- (i) Clause 19 (4) excludes a non-resident company from the definition of a company for the purposes of group relief. It is submitted that group relief should be available between United Kingdom resident companies if the relief would be available but for the non-resident status of some third company.
- (ii) The effect of clause 19 (4) (a) and (b) will be to exclude from group relief bona fide cases of groups of companies where the parent company is a finance house. The reason for this is not understood.
- (iii) Group relief should be available against all classes of income so as to include franked investment income.
- (iv) Provision should be made for the set-off of capital losses in one company in a group against capital profits in others.
- (v) Paragraph 10 dealing with shortfalls on distributions by close companies appears to give rise to anomalies in regard to group relief. The question of shortfalls in the case of groups of companies has a wider context and is dealt with in paragraph 24 below.
- (vi) It is submitted that paragraph 7 is too stringent in that, where a company joins or leaves a group, relief will be denied altogether for a certain period unless both companies concerned make up accounts to the date of acquisition or disposal. This hardship is particularly marked where a loss-making company is transferred from one group to another at a date which is not an accounting date. Neither group will be able to obtain relief for any of the loss incurred in the accounting period of the transferred company, unless accounts for all the companies concerned are made up to the date of the transfer. It is submitted that relief should, in all cases, be given by reference to apportionment on a time basis.
- (vii) Provision should be made so that trading losses, and also capital allowances under section 56 (6), of the Finance Act 1965, in a year in one company in the group which result in a net group loss can be offset against profits of other companies in the group for the previous year on which tax is payable.
- (viii) The provisions of paragraphs 12 and 13 relating respectively to the three-year surplus and overspill should be so amended that no company is in a worse position than it would have been under the existing subvention payments system.
- (ix) Payments for group relief should be expressly permitted for all companies without tax consequences.

9. It is submitted that if such anomalies and omissions cannot be remedied, the taxpayer should have the right to elect to continue 'subvention payments procedure' for as long as may be desired.

10. Paragraph 9 (1) (b) of Schedule 10, referring to claims for relief under the schedule, requires the consent of the surrendering company to be notified in such form as the Board may require. It is hoped that these forms will be made available as soon as possible.

11. Paragraph 9 (1) also provides that the claim for relief must be made within two years from the end of the surrendering company's accounting period to which the claim relates. It is considered that this limit should be extended where the loss of the surrendering company is still being negotiated at that time. A period of three years is suggested.

Clause 21 – Farming and market gardening: restriction of relief for losses and capital allowances

12. Clause 21 provides that in the case of farming or market gardening, loss relief will not be available under section 341, Income Tax Act 1952, for individuals and under section 58 (2), Finance Act 1965 for companies, where losses have been incurred for five years running, with certain exceptions. It is submitted that the exclusion of any related capital allowances should not extend to capital expenditure incurred before April 11th, 1967, as was similarly provided in section 20, Finance Act 1960, in respect of the restriction of relief for losses.

Clause 23 and Schedule 11 – Amendment of Corporation Tax Acts

Paragraph 3 – Company distributions: transfers between companies and their members or participators.

13. This paragraph amends paragraph 1 (2) (transfer of assets and liabilities between companies and their members) and paragraph 9 (2) (provision by close companies of benefits to participators) of Schedule 11 to the Finance Act 1965 and excludes from the amended provisions of these paragraphs the case of a body corporate which owns share capital in another body on the sale of which share capital a profit would be treated as a trading receipt. The accountancy bodies do not understand why finance companies should be so excluded from relief.

14. In respect of paragraphs 3 (2) and 3 (3) it is submitted that provision should be made for the particular case where relief would be available but for the non-resident status of some third company.

15. The accountancy bodies do not understand why the relief accorded by paragraphs 3 (2) and 3 (3) should be qualified by reference to a relevant distribution within the meaning of section 65 of the Finance Act 1965. In their submission, this qualification is a serious impediment to bona fide company reconstructions and amalgamations and efficient management.

Paragraph 5 – Close company: 35 per cent test for quoted shares.

16. This paragraph seeks to clarify the meaning of the expression 'beneficially held by the public' in paragraph 1 (3) of Schedule 18 to the Finance Act 1965 and the accountancy bodies wish to make the following comments.

17. It is submitted that provision should be made under paragraph 5 (2) for shares held on charitable trusts to be included under shares deemed to be beneficially held by the public.

18. In regard to paragraph 5 (3) (a) it is submitted that recognition should be extended to all regular overseas stock exchanges. (This point also applies to paragraph 1 (3) of Schedule 18, Finance Act 1965.)

19. It is submitted that funds approved under section 379 or section 388, Income Tax Act 1952, should not come within the provisions of paragraph 5 (4).

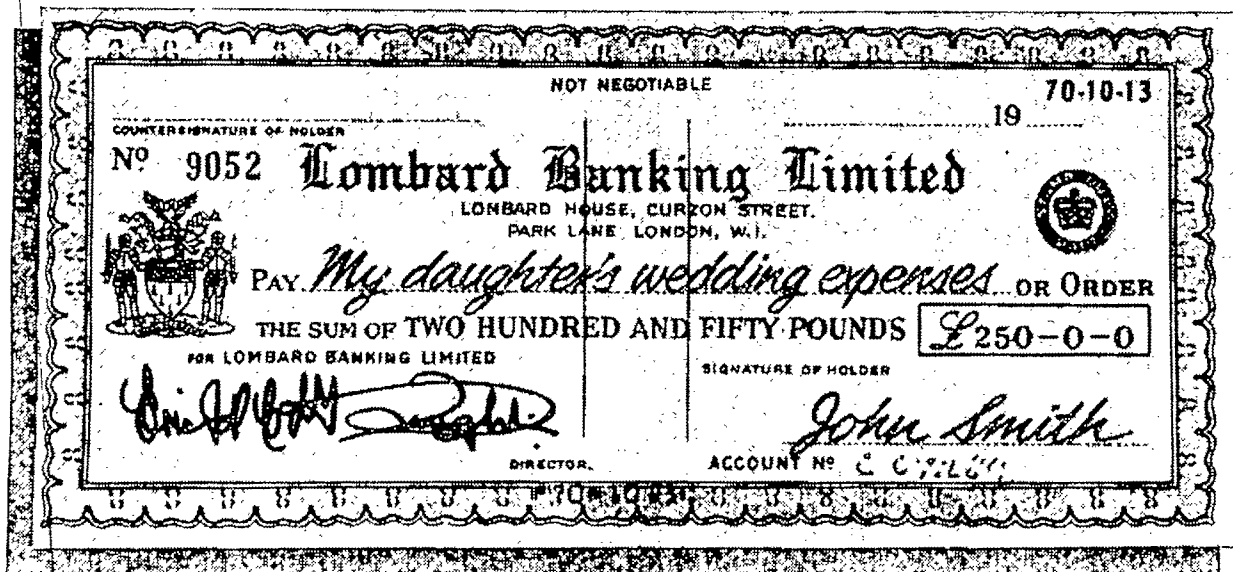

20. It is submitted that the complex provisions of para-

The Olivetti Programma 101 makes it possible for every Company, University, Department, Laboratory or Institute to have their own private, electronic digital computer.

It possesses all the essential characteristics of a 'traditional' computer (speed, logical operation, printed output, programmability), but is only a little larger than a typewriter, doesn't require a skilled operator, and is completely self-contained. 'Software' consists of a library of ready-made programs covering mathematical formulae and technical, scientific, statistical and administrative calculations. Wherever calculating machines are inadequate or large-scale computers impracticable (when teaching computer technology, for example), the Olivetti Programma 101 is the ideal answer. graph 5 (7) should be simplified so that only the five shareholders with the largest holdings should count as principal members, or where there are more than five large shareholders with equality of holding between some or all of them, then only five (including the largest) should count as principal members.

21. Since the object of paragraph 5 is to clarify paragraph 1 (3) of Schedule 18 to the Finance Act 1965, it is submitted that sub-paragraph (10) should state that, at the option of the taxpayer, the paragraph shall be deemed always to have had effect.

22. The accountancy bodies welcome the provision that, for the purpose of determining close company status, the shareholding of a non-close company is to be deemed to be held by the public. This applies, however, only to cases where exemption is sought under paragraph 1 (3), Schedule 18, Finance Act 1965, and it is submitted that the principle should be given wider application. Paragraph 1 (4) of Schedule 18 is unduly restrictive in this respect, in that it does nothing to help a company which, being under the control of a combination of five corporate and non-corporate persons, is not under the control of five individuals (or close companies), nor under the control of one or more non-close companies. This could be remedied by amending paragraph 1 (4) so that it read:

A company is not to be treated as a close company in any case where it cannot be so treated except by taking as one of the participators a company which is not a close company, but so that references. . . .

23. Comment is also made under this head in regard to company reorganizations. Difficulties are being experienced in the course of company reorganizations by reason of paragraph 12 of Schedule 18 to the Finance Act 1965. If the trade of a close company is transferred to a subsidiary in the course of a genuine reorganization leaving the parent company as a simple holding company, paragraph 12 demands that the entire profits of the last accounting period of the parent company, and probably of the previous accounting period too, shall be either distributed or form the subject of a shortfall assessment regardless of the real needs of the group. It is submitted that appropriate relief should be accorded in such cases.

24. It is submitted that a group of close companies should be regarded as a whole for the purpose of computing a possible shortfall, irrespective of whether group relief is claimed or not.

PART IV – SELECTIVE EMPLOYMENT TAX

Clause 24 – Additional provision for refunds of, and other provisions as to, selective employment tax

25. Whilst appreciating the introduction of relief in respect of part-time workers, the accountancy bodies wish to draw attention to an anomaly that will arise as a result of the provisions of this clause. The clause excludes from the benefit of refund, part-time employees under the age of 18, and this will result in the anomalous position that a part-time female worker over 18 who qualifies for a refund will be taxed at 6s 3d a week, whereas a part-time female worker under 18 will continue to be taxed at 8s a week. It is submitted that this anomaly should be rectified.

26. The relief also only applies to part-time employees who work for less than twenty-one hours a week. Since many part-time employees work on the basis of three working days a week, it is submitted that the clause should be amended to provide relief for part-time employees who work up to twenty-one hours a week or for three working days.

PART V – STAMP DUTIES

Clause 25 – Conveyances and transfers on sale: reduction of duty, and amendment of provisions for exemption

27. It is submitted that the provisions of clause 25 (4) should not apply where the transferor company has been wound up on a reconstruction or amalgamation.

Clause 26 – Loan capital: increase of duty, and amendments as to exemptions and reliefs

28. In addition to an increase in duty (from 2s 6d to 10s per £100), this clause also subjects to duty all loans, with certain specific exemptions. It is considered that this will bear harshly on the smaller company where personal loans are frequently made and it is submitted that appropriate relief should be granted.

29. In regard to the provisions of clause 26 (3), it is submitted that there should be a reasonable time limit imposed for the termination of the association to result in the payment of stamp duty on any outstanding loan.

30. Clause 26 (3) (a) exempts from stamp duty on loan capital, loans between parent and subsidiary and between fellow-subsiaries and defines 'subsidiary' by reference to section 48 (3) (a) and 48 (3) (b), Finance Act 1965. Section 48 contains no definition of a subsidiary but subsection (8) provides that Schedule 12 to the Act shall have effect. Paragraph 7 (1) of Schedule 12 provides that section 48 (3) shall not apply to dividends received by a company on any investments, if a profit on the sale of those investments would be treated as a trading receipt. Paragraph 9 (2) of Schedule 12 prescribes that in determining whether one company is the subsidiary of another there is to be ignored any share capital held in a company not resident in the United Kingdom, or any share capital owned indirectly and which is owned directly by a body corporate for which a profit on the sale of the shares would be a trading receipt. It is submitted that clause 26 (3) should be amended so as to provide that stamp duty relief in the case of a company owned by a consortium is not restricted in respect of the share capital which is owned by a finance company and that a similar relief should be extended to cases where share capital is held directly in a subsidiary company by a company which is a dealer in those shares.

PART VI – MISCELLANEOUS

Clause 30 and Schedule 13, Capital gains

Paragraph 1, Losses of husband and wife.

31. In respect of this paragraph, it is submitted that on the occasion of death, provision should be made for any allowable loss which has accrued on the death in respect of any chargeable assets passing to the surviving spouse, which cannot be deducted from gains accruing on the death or relieved by being carried back for three years, to be carried forward for the benefit of the surviving spouse. Similar provision should be made for any such loss to be carried forward to the personal representatives, where appropriate.

32. It is submitted that spouses should be treated as one person for the purposes of the provisions of paragraph 17 of Schedule 7 to the Finance Act 1965 dealing with transactions between connected persons.

Paragraph 4 – Premiums on conversion of securities.

33. It is submitted that the relief provided by this paragraph in respect of small sums received in part consideration for the disposal of securities should be extended to cover small money payments arising on a take-over.

34. It is further submitted that, in the interests of simplicity, the effective date for this relief should be April 6th, 1965, and not April 6th, 1967, as provided in sub-paragraph (6).

Paragraph 5 – Shares in close company transferring assets at an undervalue.

35. The accountancy bodies seek assurance that the provisions of paragraph 18 of Schedule 7, Finance Act 1965, do not apply where the amount equal to the difference between the market value of the asset transferred and the consideration has been treated as a distribution for Schedule F purposes.

Clause 31 – Chargeable gains: exclusion of development value of land in Great Britain and Schedule 14 – Chargeable gains: Land in Great Britain

36. Clause 31 (3) provides that an election under this subsection should be made within two years from the time of disposal. It is submitted that this should be within two years of the end of the year of assessment in which the disposal takes place.

37. It is submitted that the principles of set-off of tax against levy should be observed in the two following cases:

- (a) in respect of income tax and corporation tax on transactions in land held as trading stock by an individual or a company;
- (b) in respect of income tax or corporation tax paid on short-term capital gains.

38. It is understood that interest on unpaid betterment levy will be allowed as a deduction for corporation tax where appropriate. It is submitted that provision should be made for relief from income tax and surtax where such interest is paid by an individual.

Clause 32 – Provisions consequential on introduction of betterment levy

39. It is submitted that provision should be made for relief from estate duty for betterment levy prospectively payable following a death where the market value at the date of death contemplates development.

Schedule 15 – Provisions consequential on betterment levy

Paragraph 1 – Allowance for levy under Cases VIII and VI of Schedule D.

40. It is submitted that the principle of set-off of tax against levy should be followed.

41. Paragraph 1 (13) provides that in relation to land in Scotland for any reference to the Lands Tribunal there shall be substituted a reference to the Lands Tribunal for Scotland and that until sections 1 to 3 of the Lands Tribunal Act 1949 come into force as regards Scotland the reference is to a person selected from the panel of referees appointed under the Finance (1909-1910) Act 1910. Information is sought as to the likely date at which sections 1 to 3 of the Lands Tribunal Act 1948 will come into force as regards Scotland.

Clause 38 – Interest on unpaid tax

42. It is submitted that interest, at the rate prescribed for tax in arrears, should be payable on the amount of tax repayments not in dispute as from a date three months after the lodgement of the claim.

Clause 41 – Quorum of Special Commissioners in tax cases

43. (a) The accountancy bodies are concerned by a number of points arising under clause 41 (4).

(b) First, it is not clear who will be responsible for deciding to issue notices to appellants stating that it is intended that appeals should be heard by a single Special Commissioner. The accountancy bodies hope that it is not the intention to make the issue of notices in this form standard practice in all cases. They also seek assurance that it is not intended to alter the existing arrangements for fixing dates for the hearing of appeals; this machinery has worked, in the view of the accountancy bodies, outstandingly well.

(c) Second, as regards the form of any notice stating that it is intended that an appeal should be heard by a single Special Commissioner, the accountancy bodies consider it important that there should be shown prominently the circumstances in which a taxpayer can require the appeal to be heard by at least two Special Commissioners.

(d) Third, the accountancy bodies are concerned that where a taxpayer has arguments to present or evidence to adduce 'on the merits of an appeal', the latter phrase may not be apt to cover preliminary points, such as whether a 'discovery' has properly been made, or whether an appeal is out of time, which should, in the view of the accountancy bodies, be heard by at least two Special Commissioners unless the taxpayer agrees otherwise. The principle should be that in cases other than pure 'delay' cases a taxpayer should have the right to have his appeal heard by at least two Special Commissioners, but the form of words used does not achieve this clear delimitation. It is accordingly submitted that clause 41 (4) should be amended to the effect that if, in the course of the hearing of the appeal, or at any earlier time, the appellant declares that he intends to present arguments or adduce evidence on matters other than the question of an adjournment of the appeal or the determination of such part if any of the tax assessed as appears not to be in dispute the case shall thereafter be treated as one which cannot be brought before a single Commissioner unless the requirements of clause 41 (2) are fulfilled.

MINOR DRAFTING POINTS

44. The following points have been noted:

Page 17, line 35 – the word 'taypayer' should be 'taxpayer'.

Page 35, line 33 - the word 'aggregate' should be 'aggregate'.

Page 63, line 1 - the word 'applying' should follow 'reduced by'.

Page 73, line 18 - the word 'repaid' should be 'paid'.

Page 80, line 37 - the margin reference '1965 c.52' should be '1965 c.25'.

FINANCE ACTS 1965 AND 1966

45. There are a number of points outstanding from the memorandum of the English Institute - 'Some Taxation Anomalies and Practical Difficulties' (February 1967). In addition, a few further matters have arisen which are set out below.

Finance Act 1965, section 65 - Dividend-stripping and bond-washing

46. It is considered that this section can operate harshly where there is no intention of tax avoidance. At a time when many industries are considering reorganization and amalgamation into larger units its effect is virtually to prohibit the merger of two or more companies through the formation of a new holding company. Revenue reserves available for distribution to the existing shareholders of the individual companies become frozen or else subject to the dividend-stripping rules on the acquisition of their companies by the new holding company. Even in the case of reorganization or amalgamation by one company taking over another, there can be considerable watering down of the revenue reserves available for dividend cover. Subsequent rationalization costs of the combined companies could temporarily reduce the profits available for distribution but the effect of the dividend-stripping rules is to prevent revenue reserves being used to maintain a consistent dividend policy in a genuine business merger. Similarly these rules operate against subsequent group financial reorganization. It is suggested that amending legislation be introduced to give the following effect:

- (a) If a company, which is not a close company, acquires another company, which is also not a close company, in exchange for a consideration other than cash, that company will be deemed to have always been a subsidiary. Section 65 will not apply to dividends of the subsidiary from profits prior to the take-over.
- (b) In the circumstances in (a) above, if dividends are paid out of profits prior to the take-over, such dividends should be treated as a reduction of the cost of acquisition for capital gains tax.

Finance Act 1965, section 75 - Loans to participants or their associates

47. In view of the wording of subsection (2) it is far from clear in law whether the company will be assessed in respect of a loan where that loan has been repaid before the company has paid the amount assessed on it under subsection (1). It is submitted that the law should be clarified in this respect.

Reviews

Cost Accounting for Management Applications

by D. H. LI.

Prentice Hall International, London. 78s net.

This book should not be confused with the author's earlier work Accounting for Management Analysis issued by the same publisher in 1964 which, as the titles suggest, is of a more general nature than the present work. The topics covered here are those one would expect in a book on cost accounting, together with some others such as return-on-capital analysis, capital budgeting, computer applications, and the uses of quantitative methods. The title of the book is justified in that the purposes and uses of cost accounting data are emphasized, rather than the mechanics of producing the data.

One particularly good point is the discussion of pre-determined overhead absorption rates which Professor Li treats as a transitional stage between historic costing and standard costing. Another excellent feature is the clear and simple treatment of the arithmetic of break-even analysis, a topic which most books make unnecessarily complicated. A not-so-good feature is the analysis of overhead cost variances: every book is confusing on this topic but Professor Li's is more so than most.

On the whole this is a very sound, although not outstanding, work on cost accounting which should prove of value not only to accountancy students, but also to managers who wish to gain an understanding of the subject.

Accounting in Modern Form

by S. A. GREENMAN, B.COM., A.C.I.S.

Macmillan & Cleaver Ltd, London. 18s 6d.

Mr Greenman sets out to provide a more modern approach to the learning of the principles of book-keeping and accounts; and his work succeeds admirably. A modern setting is provided which gives a suitably up-to-date context within which a student can see the relevance of his studies and can relate those studies to the day-to-day work in his office. Moreover, the usual style of writing in such textbooks has been abandoned in favour of an adult style which treats the student with the respect he deserves.

Extending in scope to cover the intermediate examinations of all the major accountancy bodies and examining authorities, this is a book which should find ready acceptance among present-day students. The fact that it will no doubt be as acceptable to those teachers of accountancy who are eager for a new approach to a traditionally 'difficult' subject should ensure its success.

The examination questions set at the end of each chapter are nicely balanced and graded. The reader can use these questions as a valid test of his learning and proceed with a confidence both in his own achievement and the competence of the author of this excellent book.

Compass: questions and answers for the examinations of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales

The Accountancy Tuition Centre, 287 Oxford Street, London W1.

The preparation of suggested answers to examination papers is not a new idea but rarely have previous attempts reached such a high standard. The incorporation of a 'commentary' on each examination paper is a particularly happy innovation. This commentary, although of necessity brief, provides just the introduction to each question which a student needs to explain the significance of its form and content. In fact, this approach gives a new look to the examination questions themselves, since it illuminates the purpose and intention of the examiner, and leaves a student with the valid impression that the examination is a proper and fair test of his knowledge. No longer can he hide behind an impression of trick questions and confusing terminology; and thus explained, the questions lose much of their sting.

In the suggested solutions it has been realized that any attempt to impress the student with involved reasoning and 'clever', facile-looking answers serves only to discourage and defeat. The authors of Compass use a simple style, straightforward but adequate layout, and a degree of completeness in each answer to suit most students. The student should therefore feel at home and can identify himself with what he has to study in its pages. Too often in the past with publications of this kind, one feels that authors have worked the questions and then altered layout and workings into a 'perfect' form, suitable for printing but impossible for any examinee to achieve under examination conditions.

The whole work is fresh in approach, competent in its treatment, and immensely sympathetic to the student and his problems.

Finance and Commerce

Difficult reading

HAVING last week drawn attention to the extent of detail provided in the financial record and statistics by Thomas C. Keay Ltd, the theme is developed this week with the reprint of the accounts of Berry Wiggins & Co Ltd, with the emphasis being on the ten-year financial tables. Admittedly, the informed reader will understand the figures but it must be considered doubtful whether the lay shareholder does – without a struggle.

He may 'cotton on' eventually to the point (taking the 1966 line) that 2,899 plus 14 plus 633 plus 916 makes 4,462 and that by subtracting 603 and 221 he gets 3,638. He also gets 3,638 by adding together 1,335, 1,424, 738 and 141. But by being set out the wrong way – or at least not in the usual manner of ten-year record tables – the figures are decidedly tricky to cope with.

The reader is left to do the arithmetic when the object of this kind of record should be for the arithmetic to be done for the reader. The Berry Wiggins's tables, in fact, leave more than arithmetic to be done. The vital statistics of profits as a return on sales and on employed capital are not provided, although the sales growth record on a percentage basis – with 1957 as 100 – is useful.

Consultants

Sales in figures are not provided in the report but the rise in sales in ten years compared with the profit performance over that period – and also the substantial increase in capital employed – indicates, to say the least, a far from forceful position. Berry Wiggins's business is in oil refining and making bitumen and distributing it. Works and refineries are at Hoo in Kent, Manchester, Ellesmere Port and Alloa.

In his statement to shareholders, Mr C. M. W. Church, the chairman, refers to the employment of consultants to help management reduce costs and raise efficiency throughout the organization. 'The necessary steps have been taken to implement their recommendations', Mr Church says. Good results have been achieved so far, although much of the resultant reorganization is of a fairly long-term nature. It will be a year or two before the moves made become fully effective but they are expected to achieve an improvement in profit from 1968 onwards.

The main reason for the reduction in profits in 1966 was a reduction of selling prices of a high proportion of refinery products 'to meet competitive pressures'. Realization of investments in 1965 to finance capital developments reduced 1966 investment income. The fall in earnings, however, was less than originally anticipated due to a 10½ per cent increase in refinery throughput and a 23 per cent rise in sales tonnage. Sales turnover rose 10½ per cent reflecting the lower selling prices.

Outlook

The current year profit outlook is not exactly bright and 1967 'will be another difficult year'. One of the largest users of bitumen, Mr Church reports, now produce their own requirements and that will mean a substantial loss of tonnage to Berry Wiggins. There have also been further reductions this year in selling prices in the petroleum distillate section of the business. Profits overall are expected to be down on 1966.

Developments allowing the company to bring in larger crude oil tankers and so reduce freight costs should begin to assist earnings in 1968 and a new bitumen distribution in the West Country and the transfer of the head office to the main refinery installation this autumn are other moves being undertaken. Capital expenditure in 1966 amounted to some £540,000 and outstanding year-end commitments were put at £300,000.

Mr Church, who was managing director of the company until becoming chairman on May 24th last year, also reports negotiations with the trade unions towards productivity agreements. Clearly action is being taken all along the line with the object of improving the earnings position.

Trade-mark sale

If 1967 is likely to prove an earnings turning point, then it would be reasonable for the compilers of the company's report to make the next accounts a turning point by re-drafting the ten-year financial tables on a more readable basis. The information is there but in its presentation there is decided room for improvement.

Included in the reprint is the cash-flow table which is set out in readily readable form, as are the balance sheets, profit and loss account and notes. A minor point in the accounts is the provision of £125,000 concerning the Chevron trade-mark and Chevron trade name. This is in respect of the sale of the mark and name to an overseas company. A condition of the transaction, the chairman explains, is that Berry Wiggins are permitted to use the Chevron trade-mark up to November 15th, 1975, and the Chevron trade name up to November 15th, 1969. Although payment of the £125,000 has been received, the transaction cannot be finalized until approval has been given to the transfer by the Registrar of Trade-marks.

Note 4 to the accounts makes further comment on this point and a nice capital gains tax point has been thrown up. Trade-marks, it will be seen from Note 1 to the accounts, stood in the books at a nominal £2.

CITY NOTES

THE City spotlight is still on the equity sections of stock-markets. While these get their occasional dull days, the rise in The Financial Times Industrial Share Index of over twenty points since the end of last year must be considered excellent going, particularly as this covers at least two periods of uncertainty – the Budget and the Middle East crisis.

Investment advice at the moment is by no means unanimous and it is probably true that, more than ever, shares have to be judged on individual merits rather than on broad market movements.

There are those who find many prices too high, discounting prospects very far ahead at a time when costs are still rising and dividends limited. On the other hand there are few advisers who will go so far as to suggest selling, and even fewer investors who are willing to take the advice when it is offered.

One factor which has undoubtedly influenced the market scene in recent months has been the return of the institutions as buyers. The big insurance companies have been making quite large selective purchases and, with the ordinary investor sitting tight, this has led to severe stock shortage in many instances.

Then the take-over fever, which has been a feature of the market for some time, has infected most sections and the tendency to look on many shares as possible 'bid-prospects' has helped the price improvement.

Looking to the immediate future the City also sees the possibility of quite large reinvestment of steel nationalization money, all of which seems likely to keep the equity pot boiling.

THIS view of the market, however, relates to technical factors rather than the economy in general. In that direction the Government's mild reflationary measures – easier hire-purchase terms for cars, higher pensions and the new regional employment premiums – have not gone unnoticed. The real effect of these measures will not be felt until next year, though the easier hire-purchase terms may cushion the motor industry in the second half of this year.

The question remains, however, as to how far reflation can continue, and how far it can be reconciled with forthcoming balance of payment figures and trade returns. The latter for the past month, were considered satisfactory by the market, but they appeared on a day when prices were buoyant and there was a tendency to look for cheer.

The economy at home is not yet on an even keel but barring an increase in corporation tax it seems reasonable to expect company earnings to show some upturn in any overall expansion, and while that in itself may not be an outstanding bull point for equities, at least it is not the kind of influence which is going to bring in sellers, particularly those who have been holding off in the far more critical conditions of recent months. Those who say prices are too high, therefore, seem unlikely to find any compelling argument to insist on selling – always, of course, barring any completely unforeseen development.

NEWS that car insurance premiums will almost certainly go up again brings the problems of the insurance companies into sharper focus. Insurance company chairmen have been plugging away at this theme for a long time. The most recent was Lord Blackford, of Guardian Assurance, who said that rates for motor and also for fire insurance must be increased in the near future.

None other than the British Insurance Association itself backs such statements by saying that last year its members made their second highest loss on car insurance since figures began to be published in 1959.

But a survey of the position of the major composite companies by leading brokers suggests that some of the stronger concerns may increase dividends for the coming year. They base this view on the effect of gradually increasing rates and more stringent underwriting, but admit that others may need time to replenish reserves. Among the selections are Commercial Union, Phoenix, General Accident and Eagle Star.

Value of Standard Costs and Budgets?

SIR, - Professor Edey ('The Principles and Aims of Budgetary Control') writes that 'the basic control tools used by modern accountants are standards and flexible budgets' (June 3rd issue). If this is true, it is a crushing indictment of modern accountants.

Standard costing can be of great value in measuring productive efficiency and it is most applicable where production problems are dominant. Today, however, across a wide range of industry, the salient problems are those of selling, distribution and promotion, and the costs of these activities often form the major element in total costs. It is possible to use standard costing to measure these activities, but the question that the accountant should ask himself is whether standard costing is the best method of doing it. The need for flexibility in these activities, which is paramount, and the greater incidence of events outside management's direct control, frequently makes the cost of maintaining a system of standard costs for these areas of expense greater than the value of the information it gives. In many non-manufacturing businesses, for example, results are heavily influenced by unforeseen changes in raw materials costs and by sharp fluctuations in the short-run demand conditions for the product. Control objectives must then be to measure the impact on profits of price changes before these changes happen, and to forecast future demand conditions. Standard costing is of little value in achieving these aims.

Flexible budgeting also has limited application outside the field of production. Developed originally to measure the effects of unutilized capacity, it is an inferior technique to the contribution approach, which Professor Edey mentions in another context later in the same article, or the marginal analysis of revenues and costs. Flexible budgeting, by reason of its arbitrary allocations of overhead costs, its subjective assessment of variances, becomes more an exercise in accounting arithmetic, than a contribution to management control.

There is a widely held misconception, which is unfortunately reinforced by Professor Edey's remarks, that 'management accounting' begins and ends with standard costing and flexible budgets. The management accountant's objective must be to isolate the key factors in the determination of profit, and to develop techniques of measurement and control over those key areas. If he starts out with the idea that the basic tools for doing this are universally standards and flexible budgets, he is not likely to contribute to management much that is of value.

Yours faithfully,

Commercial Debt Recovery

SIR, - The 'Current Affairs' note in your issue of June 3rd raised three very interesting but, may I say, controversial points:

- (1) The cost of recovering debts is often uneconomical in Britain. May I state that this is not our experience, the average cost to our members being under 3 per cent of the debt placed with us for collection. Many debt collection organizations operate on a percentage of the debt recovered ranging up to 33½ per cent but not all do.
- (2) Too many cases are taken to Court unnecessarily. In our experience cases are never taken to Court without previous recovery steps having been taken, including a solicitors' letter, so if the account is still unpaid at that stage, it must be very necessary to proceed to judgment to enforce payment.
- (3) The gentle approach is the best. How gentle is the the normal procedure of monthly statements followed by mild reminder before any stronger action is taken some three to four months at least after the due date for payment?

It is our experience that a quick service based on a long experience in a particular trade with reasonable charges to the creditor for that service is the best method of debt recovery. It is also our experience that bad debt prevention is invariably less costly than debt recovery and an initial study at small cost of the available credit status information held on the files of many trade protection organizations would obviate the need for the latter course.

Yours faithfully,

The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants

Eighty-second Annual Conference

THE eighty-second annual conference of The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants took place in Brighton last week. After the official opening and civic welcome by the Mayor of Brighton on Wednesday morning, consideration was given to Part A (matters of general interest) of the annual report of the Council for 1966-67 and the conference was then addressed by the Minister of Housing and Local Government, the Rt Hon. Anthony Greenwood, M.P. In the afternoon, Mr W. S. Risk, B.COM., C.A., F.C.W.A., addressed the conference on 'The role of the accountant in the management team in industry'. The conference dinner and dance was held in the evening at the Hotel Metropole.

On Thursday, papers were given by Mr W. S. Hardacre, F.C.A., F.I.M.T.A., County Treasurer, Berkshire, on 'Local government finance - a time for decision' and by Mr P. R. Kaim-Caudle, of the Department of Social Theory and Institutions, University of Durham, on 'Aid to families'. A civic reception and dance took place in the Royal Pavilion in the evening.

On Friday, the retiring President, Mr Richard Partington, F.I.M.T.A., Treasurer of Eton R.D.C., delivered a presidential address before investing into office the new President, Mr J. B. Woodham, B.SC.(ECON.), F.I.M.T.A., Borough Treasurer of Middlesbrough (see 'Current Affairs', page 825).

Address by the Minister of Housing and Local Government

The Rt Hon. Anthony Greenwood, M.P., Minister of Housing and Local Government, addressing the conference, stated that only good could come from the fullest possible debate both within and outside local government circles of every aspect of structural reform. Local government, he believed, could function with more effectiveness and provide services more fitted to the needs of its area if it had the respect, interest and support of the public.

The Minister said that this was clearly a time when fresh thinking was needed about local government and, not least, about its finances, by those who live with revenue and expenditure in their daily work; although, of course, the ultimate responsibility for charting local government's future must be with Parliament, after taking proper account of the views of representatives of the existing local authorities. It was right, however, that experienced individual finance men, like the members of the Institute, should play a major part in fermenting and crystallizing ideas about what might be done, both in the development of the system and in its internal working.

In a period of accelerating growth, said the Minister, it was necessary to secure the required changes in the system. This could not be done solely in the light of past experience; a competent and imaginative assessment was needed of the way in which society, the economy and technology were likely to develop in the years ahead. Any new institutions created now must cater for the needs of the present and future, not the prejudices of the past.

The Minister went on to say that for those who were specially concerned with the financial business of local government, the challenge of advancing technology came in three linked ways: 'You have to help gauge the resultant changes in the economic, physical and social context which produces the need to plan and organize resources and spending. You also have to take account of new ways of raising and spending money more efficiently. But, above all, the increasing complexities of a technologically advanced community surely call for an increasing degree of common thinking between you and your colleagues in other departments of local government. The management problems of the future call for the maximum pooling of ideas, information, skills, techniques. There will be less and less justification for exclusive disciplines, narrow specialisms, or administration by tradition.'

The Minister added that he believed there was much more to local government than running an efficient machine to provide economic services. Local government was also, and more fundamentally, about democracy, and the general quality of life in the community, and the ways of giving tangible local expression to the local social conscience. To meet all these requirements, local government had to be rationally organized and administered and financed; it must know how to identify needs and to compare methods and measure results. It must recognize intangibles, but it must also reduce as far as possible the area of the unquantified - and it must get value for money.

The accountant in the management team

On Wednesday afternoon the conference was addressed by Mr W. S. Risk, B.COM., C.A., F.C.W.A., a director of Dexion Ltd and other companies, on 'The role of the accountant in the management team in industry'.

Mr Risk indicated that the school of thought which considered that the accountant's role should be limited to 'keeping the score' was long out of date. Although it was vital that the score should be kept, the role of the accountant nowadays was, or should be, a very active one; he should play a part in formulating the management plan, in creating the means of control to ensure the execution of the plan and, furthermore, in exercising that control.

Mr Risk surveyed the techniques available to the accountant to perform his tasks and stressed the need for accountants to familiarize themselves with the emerging new techniques. He discussed the qualifications required of the accountant in industry if he is to fulfil his role successfully, and the training he should have.

Local Government Finance

In his paper on 'Local government finance: a time for decision', Mr W. S. Hardacre stressed the need for an immediate review of local government finances without awaiting the outcome of the deliberations of the Royal Commission on Local Government expected to report in 1968. According to Mr Hardacre, people probably pay more attention to what they have to pay for local government than to the exact local government boundaries in which they live. A more emphatic need arises from the growth of local government expenditure, he declared, and in view of the fact that central Government created some of this growth and itself accepted a share of the cost, the share to be borne by local ratepayers needed a clearer and more permanent definition.

In the course of his detailed paper, Mr Hardacre made the following points. First, he said, finance could be dismissed as a detail. It was, in his words, 'almost always the limiting factor in any attempt to remould the world closer to our desires. Furthermore, if we are to ensure the emergence of a virile form of local government, we must ensure that it has a firmly established financial basis. It must also have an undisputed right to a fair share of national resources'. He conceded that that share would have to be determined by the Government but, once the share had been defined, Exchequer grants should not be regarded as doles to be given or withheld by a charitable Whitehall.

It was especially important that a decision on the future of rating should be made without delay. The continuation, modified or not, or the ending of the rating system was clearly the starting-point for future local government resources. Mr Hardacre reviewed a number of the alternatives to the present system and spoke with some approval of the possibility of replacing the concept of hypothetical rents by capital values as the basis for valuations. Furthermore, he could not help but note the fact that the motor revenues were collected locally but transferred to the Exchequer.

Mr Hardacre commented that there had been too much chopping and changing in the liability to pay rates and, in particular, he appeared critical of the present domestic rate relief. The domestic element in the new Rate Support Grant, in his opinion, had all the demerits of a temporary derating expedient likely to come home to roost in the near future, whenever the current grant arrangements are reviewed. Those who were enjoying a tenpenny rate relief in 1968-69 would be keeping a vigilant eye on any new grant arrangements to ensure that 'what they have they hold'.

On the subject of grant negotiations, Mr Hardacre was critical of what he defined as a combination of postponements, frantic examination of mountains of detail, last-minute decisions and the like which characterized the negotiations for the Rate Support Grant. This hardly seemed the way to deal with the financial affairs of such a large sector of the community, nor did it serve as a model of how to distribute about £1,300 million in one year by way of Government grant. In his view, 'the negotiations can probably best be summarized as an exercise in expediency'. There seemed to have been no master plan to retain the good parts of the old grant set-up and to correct the bad ones.

A technical point which had clearly emerged from the grant negotiations was the sheer physical effort arising from a consideration of the affairs of about one thousand four hundred separate local authorities. To collect information and to negotiate for all their different needs and wants was a tremendous task said Mr Hardacre, and this was bound to lend further emphasis to the view taken in many quarters – including the I.M.T.A. itself – that the country should be organized into a relatively small number of large top-tier authorities who would undertake negotiations of this sort with the central Government.

Aid to Families

Mr Kaim-Caudle, in his paper entitled 'Aid to families', was concerned with the problem of meeting the needs of the large family. He estimated that whereas 58 per cent of men had no dependent children and 76 per cent were responsible for either one or none, a mere 4 per cent of all men supported four or more children. In other words these few men had in their families 22 per cent of all children.

The speaker estimated that the total aid to parents for each of two children during their dependency was directly correlated with parental income. Whereas the wage-earner on £12 per week received in total £1,800 benefit in respect of each child, the middle-class parent with £36 per week was estimated to receive £6,940. This was due to the fact that the value of the allowances for tax were worth more as the income rose, and that the children of better-off parents tended to remain at school longer and enjoyed a larger share of higher educational facilities.

Mr Kaim-Caudle was critical of the confusion over tax allowances and cash benefits, i.e. family allowances in respect of children. The one, he said, was designed to bring about fiscal equity, the other was social in its purpose. He reviewed the findings and recommendations made by Lord Beveridge in his classic report on social security in respect of children's allowances, and commented that present schemes fell far short of those standards. For example, the cost of bringing current allowances up to the Beveridge standards would be about £320 million per year. This should be compared with increases in income from employment in recent years, i.e. 1963, £866 million; 1964, £1,416 million; 1965, £1,429 million and he went on to ask whether £320 million – about 1½ per cent of the annual income from employment – was not a reasonable price to pay for eliminating most child poverty.

Mr Kaim-Caudle recommended larger allowances graduated by reference to age but he believed that until children in large families were politically as important as old-age pensioners, they would tend to be relatively neglected by the major political parties.

- (1) These figures are meant to show orders of magnitude; they should not be taken as being strictly accurate.
- (2) It is assumed for purpose of illustration only, that the child whose parents earn £12 per week leaves school at 15, the one whose parents earn £24 leaves at 18, while the children whose parents earn £36 and £72 per week go to University for three years. It is also assumed that the child from the £72 per week family goes to an independent school and does not use the N.H.S.

Presidential Address

The theme of Mr Partington's presidential address was the role of district councils in the new structure of local government which was to be expected as the result from the report next year of the Royal Commission on Local Government.

Mr Partington was moved to observe that the future of many local authorities – including the larger brethren – was in doubt. The demise of the district councils, as we know them today and, more especially, of the smaller ones, was being almost universally taken for granted. He recognized that in the planning of land use in a small, dynamic and densely populated country such as Britain, it was essential that control over large areas should be exercised by larger authorities.

The creation of Regional Planning Councils to assist central Government in planning economic activity has pointed the way and strengthened the conviction that local government services need centralizing. If, however, this was the form of things to come, Mr Partington asked, how was local democracy to be preserved. He noted that the transfer of major services to the county councils had been less harsh and made more acceptable to the pride of local country district areas by compromise devices – in particular, the devolution of administrative duties by agency or delegation arrangements.

On the other hand, opinion as to the merits of delegation was divided, with the major authorities regarding it with some disapproval. Many critics quoted the view of the 1960 Royal Commission on Local Government in Greater London that 'delegation only exists to paper over the cracks caused by the split of a function between an "upper tier" and a "lower tier" authority'. In Mr Partington's opinion, all the evidence suggested that the continuation of the system of delegation was unlikely. The trial period was over and had revealed that delegation had failed because 'first tier' and 'second tier' could not, or would not, work together in the administration of the same functions without duplication of effort and conflict on policies. In short, we had to expect that the local government structure of the future would revert to a sharp division of functions between the two tiers and that the second-tier authority would take no part in the functions of the major authority.

It seemed to Mr Partington that not merely would the smaller authority cease to participate in major functions, but there was every sign that if they continue to exist at all they will suffer further emasculation. If this were the prospect, then the problem arose as to how local democracy could be preserved. In this context, Mr Partington spoke strongly of the merits of parish councils and the extent to which they satisfied people's idea of pure democracy. In contrast, at the other end of the scale were the county councils covering large areas, with administrative centres often far removed from members' constituencies. Public relations suffered because they were neither national nor truly local.

Mr Partington concluded his address with a reminder that while the Royal Commission would undoubtedly consider the community-minded electorate and the dedicated elected representatives to local authorities, they had also to consider the great disinterested majority upon whom the cause of local government made no impression.

"The non-voter may think he has his civic pride, but his real interests are to be well housed, to have the benefit of excellent health and welfare services, to give his children adequate educational opportunities, and to enjoy a neighbourhood policed and maintained in a healthy and pleasant condition. He knows nothing of boundaries and the niceties of constitutional Government, and if to provide a better environment in which to live and work, boundaries and Government bodies should be reformed, reformed they must be. He will be content with any reform which provides the answer. He has not resented the nationalization of the public utilities, nor the bureaucracy of the Ministry of Social Security; he is possibly more contented and less cantankerous than when the services they administer were in the hands of local democracy.

"The Royal Commissions will have to have regard to this man, equally with the community-minded and the dedicated elected representatives. Could it be that in this hard and ungrateful world, they will decide to give him priority over all the rest?"

Extracts from the Report of the Council for 1966–67

Public expenditure

For the greater part of the financial year 1966–67, the main influences upon public expenditure were measures taken by central Government as a consequence of the serious economic situation of the early summer of 1966. Because current and capital expenditure upon local government services employs a significant share of the nation's resources (it constitutes about 30 per cent of total public expenditure and about 14 per cent of the gross domestic product), the economic crisis measures dominated the financing of local government services.

In the capital field, cuts were made in the public investment programme; the volume of capital finance available from the Public Works Loan Board was affected, as was also the volume of money made available by local authorities for housing advances.

On current account, measures taken during the period of prices and incomes standstill and, now, the period of severe restraint, have had an impact on all types of transactions, but particularly upon wages and salaries which constitute some 45 per cent of the current cost of local authority services.

The economic measures also resulted in the imposition of important changes in the procedure by which the total amount of central Government grant money made available through the grant system for local government services was decided.

Although as a result of these and other fiscal, economic and monetary measures, the balance of payments position of the country as a whole has improved, it is important to note the very limited impact which they are expected to have upon the rate of increase of public expenditure in 1967–68.

The lesson of 1966–67 concerning the total of public expenditure is clear for all to see. It is that the annual rate of increase of public expenditure cannot be significantly altered by short-term palliatives, by harsh pruning of estimates of expenditure, by the use of modern management techniques, or by the drive for greater efficiency alone. Though these are essential, the main trend of public expenditure must be regarded as the consequence of the broad policies which have been followed by the country since the war.

It cannot be said too clearly or too often that, in the foreseeable future, public expenditure will continue to rise at a rate which is significantly greater than even the most optimistic estimate of the rate of growth of the economy as a whole, and that this trend could only be materially altered by changes in policies upon a scale which it is believed is not generally appreciated by the public.

The position is best illustrated by comparing the National Plan expectation for the control of public expenditure for the period 1964-65 to 1969-70, with the position now - the mid-point of the period. In the National Plan the Government hoped to be able to limit the rise in public expenditure to an average of 4½ per cent a year at constant prices. The rise in public expenditure in the forthcoming year, 1967-68, over 1966-67, is estimated to be 10 per cent at constant prices. And this is during a period when increases in the nation's production are significantly lower than the average increase of 3·8 per cent per annum upon which the National Plan was based.

It has been estimated that on present policies, the cost of social services will increase in the next ten years from £5,500 million to £8,800 million, an increase of 60 per cent. This trend in social services dominates public expenditure, and completely overshadows those parts of the public services in which a reducing or a slower rate of growth is possible.

The Institute draws attention in very general terms to the trends of public expenditure, because many of the critics of public expenditure fail to relate their proposals to reduce public expenditure to the size of the public sector. Many of the proposals - constructive and valuable though they are - would have only a marginal influence on the rate of increase of expenditure. Many proposals are also based on what can only be described as crude and often invalid generalizations about the relationship between the private and public sectors.

The Institute considers that the public sector is so large (equivalent to 42 per cent of the gross national product) and the momentum of growth is so powerful, that the relationship between the rate of increase in public expenditure and the economy of the country is essentially a long-term problem. Because of this, there is a particular need to improve the form of information available to the public, so that they may be able to relate more readily than at present estimated expenditure of specific policies to future trends of public expenditure as a whole. The difficulties of improving information are considerable, but the need to improve it is imperative. There is considerable and growing effort being expended in management techniques to improve the cost effectiveness of public services, and the Institute is playing its part in this improvement. Common sense dictates that an effort of the same order should be made to improve the information available to the public who, collectively, make the main decisions and in whose name public expenditure is incurred.

Staffing of local government

The report of the Committee on the Staffing of Local Government was published in March 1967. The committee, under the chairmanship of Sir George Mallaby, was set up by the Ministry of Housing and Local Government in March 1964. It was asked to consider the existing methods of recruiting local government officers and of using them; and what changes might help local authorities to get the best possible service, and help their officers to give it.

A specific section is devoted to the staffing situation in finance departments and regard is paid to the Institute's evidence. The committee feels that, although on paper the number of posts filled by inadequately qualified staff is large, there is a certain amount of evidence that there is often an unnecessary demand for qualified staff.

Consideration is given to the limited field open to chartered municipal treasurers and the committee states:

'Unless the ultimate rewards, the interest of the work and its responsibilities are attractive, the graduate or good school leaver is not likely to choose accountancy in local government.'

The committee expresses the view that local authorities must pay heed to the dangers of not recruiting graduates for professional posts. It is thought that at present the subject-matter of degrees of graduates entering finance departments is not of prime importance. As accountancy becomes more widely adopted as a university subject, a more specialized pattern of recruitment of graduates might emerge.

On management, the committee recognizes the growth in the use of management techniques during the last few years and the great demands for adequately trained staff which will occur in the near future. The committee suggests that the main source of supply of systems analysts and programmers is likely to be treasurers' departments, but in suggesting that this supply is likely to be inadequate, recommends that local authorities should take specific measures to train their own staff. The committee also urges local authorities to ensure that there is a wide appreciation among their staff of the scope and use of management services. The provision of formal management training, including planned experience for officers considered likely to reach posts of clerk or principal officer is recommended.

The committee gives unqualified support to training for professional examinations by means of release for full-time, sandwich, block release or day release courses. Stress is laid on the fact that training to pass examinations alone is not enough and it is suggested that professional officers should be given opportunities to gain the widest possible experience in their own departments.

Much of what the committee says on the training and employment of qualified staff has been practised to some degree by progressive authorities for several years. It is to be hoped that the publication of the report will give an impetus to this trend.

Management techniques

The Institute continued to play a leading part in the development of data processing in local and public authorities. Its main contribution is through the activities of the Local and Public Authorities Computer Panel. On the initiative of the Institute, the constitution of the Panel is representative of the main professional, technical and administrative skills employed in local government. The Panel is the Technical Advisory Panel to the Local Authority Associations.

The Panel has given extensive advice to individual local authorities who have been considering the installation of computers and, in this respect, has co-operated closely with the Ministry of Technology and the Ministry of Housing and Local Government.

The Panel also has links of value with the National Computing Centre and has been specially concerned in the work of the Centre in arrangements for the training of systems analysts and designers. Mr C. W. Mallinson, County Treasurer, West Sussex County Council, is a member of the Council of the Centre, and the Panel attaches importance to local authorities continuing to be represented on that council.

The Panel is under the joint Chairmanship of Sir Charles Barratt, Town Clerk, Coventry, and Mr J. B. Woodham, Borough Treasurer, Middlesbrough. Sir Charles Barratt replaces Mr C. W. Mallinson as a joint chairman. The Institute records its appreciation of the outstanding contribution which Mr Mallinson has made to the more efficient use of computers in local authorities in his capacity as co-chairman of the Panel.

In taking stock of the development of automatic data processing in public administration, the Panel recently came to the conclusion that arrangements should be made to consider the implications of data processing developments upon public administration, with particular reference to the relationship between central and local government, and to access and use of personal information.

Equipment in the Office

Within Easy Reach

TO clear one's desk and have pending material housed on a wall by the desk, within reach and to hand, is the object of Vista-Rak. Each Vista-Rak wallet contains a number of expandable pockets in ladder form with  $1\frac{1}{2}$  in. risers, one above the other. If the tops of the files, folders, job bags, etc., bear the subject title or number, these indications show themselves clearly above the item below. The contents of a wallet can be surveyed and taken in at a glance and the right item located immediately.

The unit is designed to hang on a wall at eye-level. Six eyelet holes are provided for this purpose but as the backing board protrudes slightly, it can alternatively be grooved into track material, such as Sasco aluminium chart-track, for neat wall display.

Four models of Vista-Rak are at the moment available, two holding up to 15 by 10 in. material, two holding up to 13 by 10 in. The former come in two sizes – 36 in. deep containing seventeen pockets and 24 in. deep containing eight pockets; the latter are also in two sizes; 36 in. deep containing twenty pockets and 24 in. deep containing ten pockets.

For Binding Files and Forms

A NEW British-made binding machine, simple and inexpensive enough to be used by juniors in a general office, yet giving a professional finish to match the work of a printer, is announced by Business Aids Ltd.

Books, catalogues, brochures, files, forms, archives, continuous stationery and all kinds of office records can be bound permanently in a few minutes.

The new Simplex is a threadless binder which produces a flexible welded spine of exceptional strength and allows pages to be opened completely flat, giving 100 per cent visibility. The bind can be up to  $13\frac{1}{2}$  in. in length and a spine up to 3 in. thick can be made with the Simplex system.

The binding operation takes a junior three or four minutes and the whole binding table and clamp assembly may be removed from the machine and a second assembly slipped into place; work can continue without interruption.

The Simplex offers all the advantages of the spine binding system i.e. speed, low cost of materials, and the ability to bind a wide range of work. It is portable, weighing only 25 lb and four rubber feet ensure that the machine will not mark any desk surface. Complete with one extra clamping mechanism and an initial supply of binding solution, gauge and book cloth, the Simplex is priced at £34. For those offices where only a limited amount of binding is required the machine is available with a single clamp mechanism at £27.

Changing to Decimals

A CHANGE to decimals at the flick of a switch is Burroughs' answer to the accounting machine conversion problem. The company has introduced a conversion system for accounting machines called the ABC system (Already Been Converted) which operates in sterling and/or decimal currency.

From 'D Day' onwards, the banks will require all cheques in decimal currency. Companies with Burroughs ABC machines will be able to meet this demand immediately. They will also avoid the inconvenience of having to calculate the £ s d value of all (decimal) cheques before recording them; they will be free to switch accounts to decimals and, while changing over, will also be able to switch back to sterling in order to update records not yet converted to decimal currency.

Because the average working life of an accounting machine is about ten years, almost half the accounting equipment currently installed in the United Kingdom will have to be replaced by 1971 as a matter of course. By introducing this system now – almost four years before 'D Day' – Burroughs are reducing the problem of conversion of their machines by some 50 per cent.

Burroughs handled the conversion of machines to decimalization in South Africa and Australia, and are now doing so in New Zealand. Some 2.5 million machines will have to be replaced or converted when decimal currency takes place in Britain in 1971 and Burroughs ABC series will be available in about six months – some will cost no more than the existing machines. Existing machines cannot be converted to the ABC method at present.

Magnetic Tape Encoder

A RECENT addition to the National Cash Register Company's range of computer input preparation units is the NCR 735 Magnetic Tape Encoder, through which information can be recorded on to magnetic tape for direct entry into a computer system. Up to 10,000 records can be stored on a single 1,200 ft reel, and the tape is re-usable.

The NCR 735 serves as both encoder and verifier. Data is encoded by means of a keyboard very similar to that provided with card punches. Easy-to-read display lights keep the operator informed of all phases of the machine's operation. The correction of errors is simple since the operator merely overwrites correct data in place of the errors. Reproducing, repunching and reverifying are all eliminated.

All data encoded by the 735 is written with vertical and horizontal parity and is automatically re-read to ensure accuracy. This technique minimizes the need for the computer to re-read the tape and thus frees computer time for more productive work.

The machine has its own magnetic core memory which is used to store its program which can be read into the memory from either magnetic tape or via the keyboard.

For Filming Computer Output

AS well as the microfilming of continuous-stationery output from computers, the Tab-Tronic Recorder from Bell & Howell can now be adapted for the high-speed filming of rolled and single-sheet information.

On a Tab-Tronic, the production of 16 mm. film records is fast and economical. The operator has only to introduce the lead edge of continuous or rolled stationery for automatic filming at the rate of 70 ft a minute. This high speed also permits the fast feeding of single sheets. After filming, information is automatically rerolled or stacked.

Microfilming on a Tab-Tronic saves money and aids rapid information retrieval. Six microfilm records would cost approximately the same as adding only one extra part to continuous computer stationery. Each 100 ft. reel of film will record nearly half-a-mile of stationery and give up to 1,000 reference points.

It is claimed that a Tab-Tronic 16 mm. recorder will film the entire output of ten high-speed computer printers operating eight hours a day for a five-day week – and produce an easily retrieved record that can be housed in a desk drawer.

Film can be daylight loaded and exposure control ensures consistent quality, regardless of film speed. Partially exposed films can be removed without fogging the supply roll. Adjustable to handle stationery up to 15  $\frac{5}{16}$  in. wide, filming automatically stops when document feed ceases. Visible and audible signals indicate lamp failure, faulty film loading and the end of film supply. The unit is automatically shut down by any of these signals.

Price: Tab-Tronic for continuous stationery feed, £1,350; roll-feed attachment, £275; sheet-feed attachment, £20.

THE BIRMINGHAM AND WEST MIDLANDS SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS*New President

At the recent annual meeting of The Birmingham and West Midlands Society of Chartered Accountants (formerly the Birmingham and District Society of Chartered Accountants)

Mr P. T. Neal, F.C.A., a partner in the firm of Agar, Bates, Ledsam & Co, Chartered Accountants, was elected President for the ensuing year.

Mr Neal was educated at Winchester and served his articles with his present firm with whom, apart from service during the Second World War, he has remained during the whole of his career. During the war he served in the Intelligence Corps, holding the rank of major and being mentioned in dispatches.

He has held the offices of secretary and President of the Birmingham Students' Society and prior to his recent election as President of the senior Society, he has been treasurer, secretary and vice-president.

Mr Neal is following a family tradition in his presidency, his father Mr T. D. Neal and his brother Mr David Neal also having held the office in 1925-26 and 1947-48 respectively.

Other new officers for 1967-68 are as follows:

Vice-President: Mr S. B. Jackson, F.C.A., J.P.

Secretary: Mr K. J. Milligan, M.A., F.C.A., Howard Smith, Thompson & Co, Beaufort House, 96 Newhall Street, Birmingham 3.

Assistant Secretary: Mr R. F. Griffiths, F.C.A.

Treasurer: Mr D. H. Stokes, B.A., F.C.A.

Dinner Secretary: Mr C. A. Lee, F.C.A.

Librarian: Mr N. J. Masterton, F.C.A.

Committee's Report

The annual report shows the membership of the Society at December 31st, 1966, as 2,522, of whom 950 were members in practice, 1,560 not in practice, and twelve 'invited' members.

Four conferences which proved of considerable value to members were held during the year; in July a one-day conference on taxation took place at Church Stretton, while in September specific aspects of the 1965 and 1966 Finance Acts were dealt with at a one-day conference at Birmingham University attended by nearly two hundred members. For the fourth year, in conjunction with the Liverpool Society of Chartered Accountants, the Society held a weekend residential conference in April for 150 members at the University of Keele; subjects covered included corporation tax, capital gains tax, and capital allowances and investment grants. Also in April a one-day conference on auditing took place at the Pavilion Suite, Warwickshire Cricket Ground.

In addition to eight general meetings during the winter months, the Society arranged two electronic data processing appreciation courses. The Society's two discussion groups - one for members in practice and the other for accountants in industry - continued to meet during the year. The committee expresses the hope that more members will take advantage of the opportunities afforded by these groups.

SOUTH-WEST ESSEX GROUP OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

The second annual general meeting of the South-west Essex Group of Chartered Accountants took place on June 1st and the following officers were elected:

Chairman: Mr J. R. Train, F.C.A., J.P.

Vice-Chairman: Mr P. H. Newman, F.C.A.

Treasurer: Mr J. D. Tabor, F.C.A.

Secretary: Mr D. E. Heady, F.C.A., 187A South Street, Romford, Essex (telephone Romford 44728).

In addition, a committee of seven other members was appointed.

The group has been active over the past year and held meetings on a variety of topics which have attracted reasonable attendances. The most popular of the meetings have again been those on taxation subjects and further similar meetings are planned for the forthcoming year.

Two taxation discussion groups have been formed and the group has again sent representatives to careers conventions and other such functions.

NORTH WEST SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS*New President

At the annual meeting of the North West Society of Chartered Accountants, Mr R. Bryan Arrowsmith, F.C.A., finance director of G. Arrowsmith & Sons Ltd, of Preston, was elected President for 1967-68.

Mr Arrowsmith was educated at Nash, M.B.E., F.C.A., of Preston, and was admitted to membership of the Institute in 1950. After a period in practice he took up his present position as finance director of a company in the building supply industry.

Mr Arrowsmith acted as secretary of the former Preston Branch of the Manchester Society of Chartered Accountants and from 1959 to the time it was created a Society was secretary of the North Lancashire Branch of the Manchester Society.

He is a member of the board of governors of a number of schools; a past president of the Old Mountaineers Association; the hon. treasurer of the Preston Council of Social Service, and a director of several companies.

Mr Arrowsmith represents the North West Society on the Institute's Technical Advisory Committee and has lectured or contributed articles on accounting for management and allied subjects to a number of agricultural organizations.

Other new officers of the Society for 1967-68 are as follows:

Vice-President: Mr W. G. Hunniball, F.C.A.

Hon. Secretary: Mr J. W. Greenwood, F.C.A., Messrs Moore & Smalley, 1A Chapel Street, Preston, Lancs.

Hon. Treasurer: Mr D. H. Preston, F.C.A.

Like most go-ahead companies, Mr. X's scientific instrument firm had a keen eye on the export market. But before you can win orders you must have the production capacity to meet them: which in turn means a capital outlay that may not be recoverable for some years. That is when he decided to come to I.C.F.C. for financial help and advice. When we were assured that his programme was soundly conceived we were glad to help. That was eighteen months ago; today Mr. X has doubled his overseas sales with I.C.F.C.'s help—but without any interference in the running of his business.

22,000 Limbless Ex-Service Men await a word from you

A word of encouragement and a token of help - needed, now, by British Ex-Service men who have sacrificed a full life. Many of them are completely unable to help themselves. Money is urgently needed to help these men conquer their handicap - money to equip and maintain homes in which they can be given convalescence, or care and comfort in their old age. BLESMA is not aided by the State. Will you help?
